Farley to Quit August 17; Party Chiefs Are Worried

Chairman Pledges Support to Ticket; Feels People Want Democrats to Win

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

Chicago, July 19.—With one month's notice from "Big Jim" Farley, the Democratic National Committee reorganized today for a bitterly contested Presidential campaign, weighted by the third term as an untested issue and a threatened party split.

Reluctantly the committee accepted Farley's decision to step down as chairman August 17. It must head into the campaign thereafter under direction of a man as yet unnamed and minus leadership of the political genius who twice steered the party to landslide success.

The postscript of this never-to-be-forgotten Democratic convention was signed today under an arrangement that pledges Farley to "full support of the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket," but puts up to the President the choice of his successor.

Must Heal Wounds

As the President picked Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, and won his nomination over a resentful, booing Democratic minority, so he now must choose a man who can heal the growing rift stemming from this convention and direct probably the strangest campaign in political annals.

A subcommittee of five, headed by Edward J. Flynn, of New York, was appointed to confer with Mr. Roosevelt. This group was fully empowered to appoint as chairman the man he selects. Farley, meanwhile, was reelected for the intervening one month.

The name of the President's close friend, Frank Comperford Walker, was on everyone's lips as the next probable national chairman, but Walker has made clear he does not want the assignment.

Farley's decision, the only remaining "if" of this convention's big three, was disclosed to a strictly harmonious committee meeting, ringing with warm praise of the retiring chairman.

Most delegates and State party leaders, many sincerely worried and thoroughly scared, already had fled this town. Stimulated to battle by the President's early morning acceptance talk, they were still seriously concerned over three things—the party-scarring floor battle on Wallace, the third term as an issue, and last but not least, the departure of Farley.

Isn't Taking a Walk

The Postmaster General did not say when he would step out of the Cabinet as Postmaster General—that was a matter for the President to announce. He made genuinely

Roosevelt's 'One Exception' Leaves Newsmen at Loss

The man who isn't here had Washington wondering yesterday.

President Roosevelt told the Nation in his acceptance speech that regardless of party, everyone he had called on "with one exception" had come to the Capital to join the defense drive.

White House Secretary Stephen Early said he did not know the identity of the "one exception" and told newsmen:

One man was dead and another prostrated by heat last night, while Washington slowly recovered from a day of excessive heat and humidity and hoped for better luck today. It hoped, the weatherman declared, in vain.

Today will be "continued fair and warm," he said, even as he explained that yesterday wasn't so hot; it was humid. The mercury climbed from a comfortable 70 at 6 a. m. to 93 at 3:15 p. m. and the discomfort of District citizens climbed likewise. Relative humidity was 63 per cent at 8 a. m.

The dead man was Jubal Booth, 56, of 1428 Monroe street northwest, who collapsed while working as a carpenter on a building in Arlington, Va. Taken home, he was transferred to Doctors Hospital, where he died two hours later.

John P. Roahl, 74, of 2106 Taylor street northeast, was taken to Casualty Hospital yesterday after being found dazed in the 1200 block of G street northwest. He was treated for heat prostration and admitted.

Many citizens endeavored to escape the heat by taking to the outdoors in their automobiles, and traffic during the early part of last night was abnormal, even for a summer night. Hundreds made trips down the Potomac on excursion boats or simply sprawled in the parks or along the river.

Roosevelt Sails Down Potomac To Seek Rest

To Clear Mind of Convention Cobwebs, Then Go to Hyde Park

That morning-after feeling descended on the White House, and even on President Roosevelt, yesterday as he contemplated the third-term race.

Tired from writing a large chapter for American annals in one night, the President sailed down the Potomac on his yacht last night to get some undisturbed rest.

He planned to return to Washington late today and then, perhaps tonight or tomorrow night, entrain for his home at Hyde Park, N. Y.

Close to telephone connections with Europe and Asia, a convenience whose importance he stressed in his acceptance speech, the President would rest at his Hudson Valley estate until the middle of next week before returning to his White House desk, Secretary Stephen Early announced.

The President was not slow, however, in getting back into his routine of conferences on his major current interest—the national defense program.

Though he slept late and had no formal engagements in the morning, the President conferred with War Secretary Stimson, Navy Secretary Knox, Treasury Secretary Morgenthau and Attorney General Jackson in the afternoon.

Acceptance night, after broadcasting to the convention and the

More Leading Democrats Bolt to Willkie

McCormick, Cobb And Chadwick Join Dissidents

Manifestations of no-third-term sentiment among Democrats continued yesterday, amid discussions of a possible national organization of those members of the party unwilling to support President Roosevelt a third time.

Vance C. McCormick, who as chairman of the Democratic National Committee in 1916, directed Woodrow Wilson's reelection campaign, announced through his newspaper, the Harrisburg (Pa.) Patriot, that he would support Wendell Willkie, the Republican nominee.

An editorial in the Patriot today will say:

"Thus far in the campaign, in the opinion of many persons, Mr. Willkie adheres more closely to the fundamental Democratic faith than do Mr. Roosevelt and his inner associates. As long as Mr. Willkie adheres to these doctrines the course of the genuine believer in Jeffersonian democracy is clear and urgent."

Stephen F. Chadwick, last year's national commander of the American Legion, son of a life-long Democratic judge in Washington State and himself a former Democratic Congressional nominee, yesterday announced he will support Willkie.

"A designed third term developed under forced draft presents a real danger to the perpetuity of our

Presidency No Sacrifice, Says Willkie

G.O.P. Nominee Slaps At Roosevelt Speech In Addressing Stockmen at Denver

Denver, Colo., July 19.—Wendell L. Willkie told a group of Western cattlemen today that he was running for President, not under pretense of "noble motives" or "unselfish sacrifices," but because of certain deep-seated convictions which he wanted to present to the American people.

A few hours earlier Willkie had heard President Roosevelt say, in his speech accepting the Democratic third-term nomination, "My conscience will not let me turn my back upon a call to service."

The Republican candidate said he had learned about the democratic way of life, not from books or theorists, but from experience; that he had learned about civil liberties "not in textbooks, but in a hard struggle for survival."

An outdoor audience of about 400, including cattlemen and sheep raisers from Wyoming, New Mexico, Oregon, California, Utah, Nevada, Idaho, Nebraska, Kansas and Colorado, applauded Mr. Willkie's brief address, delivered under a blazing Monday sun in front of the Live Stock Exchange building.

Speaks Amid Bales of Hay

"I shall make no pretense of noble motives," he said, speaking from a truck banked with bales of hay. "I am not going to tell you of my unselfish sacrifices in seeking the nomination for President of the United States.

"I frankly sought the opportunity to run for President on the Republican ticket because I have some deep-seated convictions I want to present to the American people and which, if I am elected, I want to carry into execution.

"I know something about the Democratic way of life, not from reading about it in books, not from hearing about it from theorists, but from experience. I have worked on the ranges and on the farms. I learned about civil liberties, not in textbooks, but in a hard struggle for survival.

Confers With Stockmen

"I know your aspirations and your hopes, because you're the kind of people I grew up with. I know your resolve that this great democracy shall be preserved at all hazards. If you elect me President you will have someone who understands the everyday problems of everyday people. I have lived with them and I glory in the fact that my route was the hard route, not the soft way."

Earlier, Willkie had conferred on questions concerning cattle and farm problems with a group of farmers and stockmen. Gov. Ralph L. Carr, of Colorado, who arranged the conference, and Col. C. Wayland Brooks, Republican candidate

Many Neighbors Greet Wallace At Des Moines

Des Moines, Iowa, July 19 (AP).—More than 300 friends and neighbors of Henry A. Wallace greeted the Democratic nominee for Vice President when he arrived from Chicago tonight for a short vacation at his home.

Cheers for "the next Vice President of the United States" were heard from the crowd as Wallace stepped from the train.

"I had intended to take a longer vacation," Wallace told the crowd. "But this thing came up and now I must go back next Tuesday or Wednesday and see the President."

At the train were his son, Bob, 22, and his daughter, Jean, 20.

Britain Refuses to Discuss Hitler's 'Last' Offer of Peace As Alternative to Destruction

Fuehrer 'Appeals To Reason,' Says He Never Desired To Hurt Empire

By the Associated Press

Berlin, July 19.—Adolf Hitler, the conqueror of France and the controller of a continent, tonight offered Great Britain a last chance to withdraw from the conflict or see destruction of her world empire and terror for millions.

He spoke for an hour and 35 minutes before the Reichstag, to offer "still another appeal—this time the last—to reason."

He did not outline the conditions for a peace that will end a conflict which, he said, it is senseless to prolong. But he made it perfectly clear that any peace must be on terms of Germany.

He set no time limit for Britain's answer to this "last" appeal, and gave no clew to the conditions under which he might be disposed to open peace talks.

In this respect his "peace appeal" was simply an appeal to the British to come to their senses and sue for peace before it is too late.

"Relieved My Conscience"

He emphasized that "I am not the vanquished, begging favors, but the victor, speaking in the name of reason."

Hitler's every word, every gesture suggested the supremest confidence as he warned Prime Minister Churchill that if he insists on a fight to the finish "I prophesy destruction of a great empire, an empire it was never my intention to destroy or even harm."

With a stab of his hand Hitler swept back the lock of hair which regularly falls over his forehead, and continued:

"Possibly Mr. Churchill will again brush aside this statement of mine by saying it is merely born of fear and doubt in our final victory.

"In that case I shall have relieved my conscience in regard to things to come. . . ."

"When My Answer Comes"

Hitler warned the people of Great Britain that their leaders "probably have no real conception of what it will mean, once the German offensive begins in earnest against the British Isles."

Referring to Britain's air war against German munitions centers and other strategic points, Hitler said:

"A short time ago Churchill began to bomb the civilian population in Germany.

McNutt, 49, Says He'll Finish Year In Security Post

Chicago, July 19 (AP).—Paul V. McNutt, who dramatically withdrew from the Vice Presidential race after receiving a tremendous ovation at the Democratic National Convention, celebrated his forty-ninth birthday today and told reporters he probably would "finish out this year" as Federal Security administrator.

Beyond that, he said, he had made no plans.

McNutt said President Roosevelt had called him by telephone last night after the convention closed.

"Did he thank you?" a reporter asked.

"He did that—and more than that," said McNutt with a smile.

A movement to make McNutt the Presidential nominee four years hence got under way bright and early this morning. James E. Perry, managing director of the Paul V. McNutt for President in 1940 Club, Inc., sent a telegram to the Secretary of State of Indiana asking incorporation papers for the Paul V. McNutt for President in 1944 Club.

Dutch Face Nazi Reprisals Over Colonies

Residents of Holland To Pay for Action Against Foe in Indies

By the United Press

The Hague, Netherlands, July 19. German authorities announced today reprisals would be taken against certain distinguished persons now in Holland because of the alleged mistreatment of German subjects in the Dutch East and West Indies.

Nazi authorities directing the administration of German-held Holland, announcing the "unavoidable reprisals" at a press conference, said that the Dutch in the West and East Indies had refused to release Germans from concentration camps.

A number of Dutch subjects connected with the Dutch colonial administration were arrested. Dutch mail service to the East and West Indies was suspended indefinitely.

The nature of the new reprisals was not revealed, but their announcement came close on a spread of passive resistance among the conquered people of Holland and reported attacks on Nazis in uniform.

The Dutch authorities in the East and West Indies, it was added, have

British Sink Italian Cruiser; Another Flees

Australia's Sydney Sends Fast Colleoni Down With 250

By the Associated Press

London, July 19.—The Italian light cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni, one of the fastest warships, was sunk with the probable loss of 250 men in the Mediterranean, off Greece, during a fierce naval and air action today with the Australian cruiser Sydney, supported by a small destroyer force, the British admiralty announced.

One British destroyer rescued 250 men from the Italian vessel. It was presumed another 250 Italian seamen lost their lives since the ship's normal complement was 500. It was Italy's first cruiser loss reported in this war.

The British units fell on the Bartolomeo Colleoni and another cruiser 30 miles off the Island of Crete. The second cruiser fled, Capt. J. A. Collins of the Sydney reported.

Eyewitness reports of the battle came from Piraeus, Greece, where passengers aboard the Greek steamer Frinton landed.

"Italian bombers roared by us in waves to attack the six British ships," the passengers said. "We

London Holds Speech Unworthy Of Reply Except By Guns, Bombs

By the Associated Press

London, July 19.—Britain scorned Adolf Hitler's "last" peace offer tonight as unworthy of reply except in the easily understood language of bomb blast and gunfire.

The German dictator gave point to his threats of total destruction by launching one of the widest and heaviest air raids Britain ever has experienced.

But the Royal Air Force ranged far over Germany and German-subjugated lands to bomb factories and military storage places, including the Krupp plant at Essen, and the Royal Navy sent to the bottom of the Mediterranean the Italian cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni, a 40-knot warship rated as one of the world's fastest.

Raiders Downed

The British defense forces shot down at least 11 of the German aerial raiders—four bombers and seven fighters, at a cost of five British fighter planes.

More than 150 German and British planes participated in two big battles off the southeast coast this afternoon. Nearly 70 Nazi bombers and fighters were engaged in the first, and more than 50 in the second.

German raiders came back again in the night, but apparently inflicted little damage. One was believed shot down off southeast Scotland, another was driven away from southwest Scotland, and witnesses in southwest England said at least 15 bombs were dropped there while one Nazi plane tried to machine-gun persons near a railway station.

Official sources said Hitler's peace offer was not worth talking about and that there was no necessity for official reaction.

Other Britons took the attitude that Hitler's latest peace overture had been answered in advance five days ago by Prime Minister Winston Churchill's declaration:

"Be the ordeal sharp or long, or both, we shall seek no terms; we shall tolerate no parley."

[Vatican circles expressed themselves as favorably impressed with Hitler's speech and asserted Pope Pius is ready to make a supreme effort to prevent a "fight to annihilation," International News Service reported from Vatican City.

[These quarters intimated the pontiff would, to begin with, strive for a temporary truce to give Europe a respite from wholesale devastation and allow time to ex-

Bullitt, Ex-Queen On Clipper Due In N. Y. Today

New York, July 19 (AP).—William C. Bullitt, United States Ambassador to France, and Zita, former Empress of Austria, were en route to New York tonight aboard the Dixie Clipper, from Horta, the Azores.

Pan American Airways said the clipper would reach La Guardia Field at 10:30 a. m. (E. S. T.) tomorrow.

The Empress, whose son, Archduke Otto, is already in New York, was accompanied by her daughter, Princess Elizabeth.

The clipper, with 12 passengers aboard, was delayed in its departure from Lisbon but overtook the Yankee Clipper which stopped at Horta last Monday to repair motors. The Atlantic Clipper has been held up by mechanical trouble at Horta since Tuesday.

'Nonpolitical' Roosevelt Talks Cause Broadcasters Alarm

By James D. Secrest
Post Staff Writer

Broadcasters are puzzled and somewhat alarmed by President Roosevelt's announcement that he will conduct no political campaign but will make periodic talks on the state of the Nation.

Presidential addresses, such as the fireside chats, are carried as sustaining features. That is, the broadcasters bear the cost, which often is high due to the cancellation of commercial programs. For political addresses, even by the President, they charge high rates.

The major networks have already spent or lost due to cancellation of commercials more than $500,000 by covering the Republican and Democratic conventions. The G. O. P. Convention cost NBC, CBS and Mutual $363,000. The bill on the Chicago meeting hasn't been tabulated.

While this convention coverage is considered a public service, the broadcasters anticipate getting much more than they have lost by selling time for political addresses between now and November.

In 1936, the Republicans spent about $850,000 and the Democrats $600,000 on radio, and this year the Republicans are expected to spend at least $800,000. The networks alone received nearly $1,275,000 of this amount, according to Broadcasting Magazine, trade organ.

While the 1936 campaign presented the broadcasters with some difficult problems with regard to

Japanese Hoodlums Beat N. Y. Times Writer in Shanghai

By the United Press

Shanghai (Saturday), July 20.—Two gunmen today entered the apartment of Hallett Abend, correspondent of the New York Times, and beat him.

It was the second attack on a newspaperman within 24 hours. Samuel Chang, American-educated Chinese publisher, was killed yesterday.

Abend said the gunmen, whom he identified as Japanese, entered his apartment shortly after midnight and demanded the manuscript of "an anti-Japanese book which you are writing."

They struck the correspondent on the head with pistols, wrenched one of his arms and forced him to his knees, as they demanded his manuscript.

The correspondent was released when he surrendered the manuscript of a biography of Frederick Townsend Ward, an American soldier of fortune who commanded the Chinese imperial armies in the Taipong rebellion.

Abend said the book, obviously not anti-Japanese, was the only manuscript he had.

The correspondent had been working on the manuscript for nine months. He reported the incident to the United States consulate general where it was said a protest will be made demanding a guarantee of nonrecurrence and compensation.

While attacking him, the correspondent said, his assailants shouted:

"Why have you been sending insulting telegrams about Maj. Gen.

UNCLE SAM FLEXES HIS BICEPS AND SUNDAY'S POST TELLS YOU ABOUT IT

NATIONAL GUARD "A blare of bugles, a riffle of drums." Yes, the National Guard does look fine parading down Constitution avenue. But there's a lot more to being a Guardsman than parading. In a most timely eight-page picture section, The Sunday Post shows you exactly what the Guard does to keep in trim and ready for emergency.

Here is the picture of the District of Columbia's own National Guard: What they do in civilian life. Recruiting. Map making. Bridge building. Aerial defense. Rifle practice. Life at Camp Ritchie.

You'll have a new appreciation of the Guard and the men who give their time to it after you've scanned this picture story in Sunday's Post.

COAST DEFENSE While Washington's National Guard learns how to defend the Capital from possible air attack, the Army and Navy are concentrating on similar problems on the West Coast. Jack Norris, who was an editor of the Army & Navy Journal before coming to The Post, gives you some facts—with map—on the improvements and additions being made along the shores of the Pacific.

MAKING PLANES Last week Norris reported on the progress being made by our airplane manufacturers in turning out those "on order" planes we wish we had "on hand." This week the Sunday Post carries an article showing the step by step progress in making a plane. Put on your overalls and step up to the assembly line with us.

"OUR SEA" The Mediterranean may be "Mare Nostrum" to the Italians, but how about the Caribbean to Americans? Suppose the Nazis actually do whip England—should the United States step in and take over the British, French and Dutch possessions near the Panama Canal? See how the American public votes on this question, in Sunday's Gallup Poll.

CUBAN CONFERENCE Barnet Nover has gone to Havana to follow the Pan-American conference, called to consider the new problems facing the 21 American Republics. One of these problems is that of the European possessions just referred to. Others concern trade, fifth columns, defense. In a special Sunday Post article Barnet Nover makes crystal clear the reasons for the conference, the vexing problems that must be faced, the reasons why they are so difficult of solution, the importance of getting them solved—somehow. A big map accompanies the article.

CROPS and COSTS Chester Davis' job is to keep agricultural production geared to defense needs; Leon Henderson's to keep an eye on prices so that costs won't soar with increased industrial activity. Gerald Gross gives you the story of two more of the members of the National Defense Council.

PALOOKA'S PAL Even the comics have gone in for preparedness. You'll get a chuckle out of Sunday's Joe Palooka page, showing what happens when little Max tries to join the Army.

AT EASE When the parade of articles on defense is over, you'll find you still have a big Sunday Post before you, with lots of news and columns from Hollywood (and a two-color picture of Ginger Rogers), radio page, rotogravure, society and club news, Washington's biggest and best sports section, and such special articles for women as Malvina Lindsay's skit on "Back to Nature," Marshall Adams' feature on knitting and Carolyn Abbott on waterproof make-up and other beach beauty aids.

WHY BUY Joe Lalley, The Post's book editor, says that our lead review Sunday is by Dean Christian Gauss, of Princeton, that he's reviewing volumes 3, 4 and 5 of Arnold Toynbee's "A Study of History," that this is the greatest history since Buckle's, and that you ought to buy the Sunday Post just for that one article.

But it's all right to buy it for the comics.

Women Democrats Are Booming Rep. Norton for Vice Chairman

Leaders Jubilant Over Successes At Convention

By Christine Sadler

Chicago, July 19.—Although they today relinquished their power in the matter to President Roosevelt and a five-member committee, Democratic women still hope to see Representative Mary T. Norton, of New Jersey, boosted into the job of first vice chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

If evident sentiment among national committeewomen is followed, able Mrs. Norton, chairman of the House Labor Committee, will succeed to the position which has been vacant since the resignation of popular Mary ("Mollie") Dewson in 1937.

Whatever organization is decided upon, however, the women will remain happy and satisfied with results of this, their "most important convention." Armed with statistics to prove they cast at least half the votes in their party, their victory here has been complete.

Never Anything Like It

"I can think of nothing we wanted that we did not get, from a 50-50 voice in the platform on down. There has never been anything like it in any political party before," declared Mrs. Dorothy McAllister jubilant director of the women's division.

Mrs. McAllister, who sprained her wrist in convention hall yesterday and appeared at final sessions with her arm in a black chiffon sling, doubtless will be renamed to her present position.

Wife of a Michigan Supreme Court justice, she has built up the womens' division on lines laid down by Miss Dewson and today has an organization nucleus of 120,000 women leaders in all parts of the country. That these leaders can produce results in their own neighborhoods was evidenced in the National Institute of Government held in Washington this spring, when they sent 5,000 delegates to "learn all about government and campaigning."

Mrs. Harriman Reelected

On the five-member committee to complete organization of the national committee in cooperation with the President are Mrs. Mildred Jaster, national committeewoman from Ohio, and Miss Beatrice Cobb, publisher of a paper in Morganton, N. C.

New committeewomen elected at the convention included Mrs. Marie R. Colgan, of Baltimore, for Maryland; Mrs. John Garland Pollard, of Richmond, for Virginia.

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman was reelected to the job from the District of Columbia. Mrs. Harriman has been represented at the convention by her proxy, Mrs. Evelyn Condon.

Headquarters in Chicago

The Republican National Committee announced yesterday that its women's division had established headquarters for the Presidential campaign in Chicago, with Miss Marion E. Martin, Bangor, Me., in charge.

Miss Martin said that the new office also would be the campaign headquarters for the National Federation of Republican Women's Clubs and for Mrs. Grace B. Reynolds, of Indiana, a vice chairman of the national committee.

the addresses of the President, there were a number of speeches at rallies which were clearly political and could be charged for according to the number of stations in the hook-up.

President Roosevelt, in his address of acceptance, which was considered a sustaining feature, stated that he would be unable to conduct a regular campaign because of pressing duties of state.

Fireside Chats Sustaining

"I do expect, of course, during the coming months to make my usual periodic reports to the country through the medium of press conferences and radio talks," he said.

The President's "fireside chats," which incidentally were given this name by Harry C. Butcher, president of CBS, have been recognized by all broadcasters as sustaining programs. The question that worries the broadcasters now is whether the "periodic talks" during the campaign can be labeled sustaining or commercial.

Wendell Willkie, because he holds no public office, will have to pay for all his radio time.

Four years ago the Federal Communications Commission was confronted with a delicate problem when several stations on one of the networks refused to carry one of Roosevelt's addresses, which the network had considered a sustaining program and the stations insisted was a political talk. The stations were upheld, however, in their refusals.

The self-imposed code of the National Association of Broadcasters prohibits its members from charging for carrying controversial talks, in which both sides must be treated equally, but permits stations to charge for political talks.

"This exception is made," the N. A. B. points out, "because at certain times the contending parties want to use and are entitled to use more time than broadcasters could possibly afford to give away."

3,000 to Honor Catholic U. Saint

More than 3,000 are expected to worship at solemn high mass tomorrow at Catholic University, honoring Mary, patron saint of the institution.

Lay and clerical students of the summer session, university teachers and members of the affiliated religious houses of study, will march from McMahon Hall to the Shrine of the Immaculate Conception, reciting the rosary.

The Rev. John J. Jepson, S. S., chaplain of the summer session, will be celebrant of the mass, set for 10 a. m., and the Very Rev. Gabriel Pausbach, O. Carm., assistant general for the Carmelite Order for English-speaking provinces, will deliver the sermon.

The normal Friday press conference and Cabinet meeting were canceled as the Chief Executive attempted to clear from his mind for a while all thoughts of delegates, roll calls and party squabbles.

for the United States Senate in Illinois, sat in on the session with the Republican Presidential nominee.

At the Stock Exchange Building Mr. Willkie was the guest of Joseph A. Shoemaker, president of the Denver Live Stock Exchange. A buffet luncheon, attended by 100 cattlemen and commissionmen, was served. Then the Presidential nominee was taken on a tour of the stockyards. He inspected a pen of Merino sheep, shipped in this morning from Mountain Home, Idaho, and looked down from the wooden runway on several pens of beef cattle.

Later in the afternoon he drove to Brighton, Colo., to inspect a beet-sugar farm and plant.

Message From Cobb

While in Denver, Mr. Willkie received a message from Los Angeles, stating that Irving S. Cobb, famous author, had sent the following telegram to Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Nebraska, who yesterday announced his support of the Republican nominee's candidacy:

"As a lifelong Democrat, I regret that we have had to wait from 1896 to 1940 for a Presidential nominee who was named neither by the party bosses nor party patronage. As a lifelong Democrat, I rejoice that a real fellow Democrat has been so nominated, even though it took a Republican convention to nominate him.

"The Kelly Machine in Chicago, the Hague machine in New Jersey were against him. If the leaders thereof weren't snarled up with jail sentences the Long machine in New Orleans and the Pendergast machine in Kansas City also would be against him. It appears that there was nobody much for him except just the people.

"But if such anti-third term Presidents as Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Buchanan and Wilso were alive, it seems certain they could be for him.

"As a lifelong Democrat, still seeking the congenial company of practitioners of the political faith of my fathers, please enroll me as a high private in the rear rank of the Incurable Democrats Willkie-for-President Culb."

Maritime Union for Willkie

New York, July 19 (INS).—The national council of the National Maritime Union today repudiated its recent indorsement of President Roosevelt and the New Deal and denounced the third term.

However, the C. I. O. affiliate, which claims a membership of more than 65,000, failed to clarify its stand on the fall election when it also passed a resolution declaring that "the role of the Republican Party is traditionally antilabor and the convention in Philadelphia bore out that tradition."

Roosevelt Signs Reserve Benefit Bill

President Roosevelt yesterday signed a measure granting benefits under the Federal Employes Compensation Act to officers and men in the Army Reserve Corps who were injured or killed on active duty or training between 1925 and 1939.

Rochester, Minn., July 19 (AP).—Representative Fred Cummings, of Colorado, left Colonial Hospital today for a hotel. He was operated on ten days ago. He planned to rest a few days before going with Mrs. Cummings to their home in Colorado.

Valet Objects to Reference To Wallace as 'Shabby' Man

Whoever said a man is no hero to his valet hadn't talked to Edward Crockett, colored, the man who makes Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace as "well dressed as President Roosevelt."

Crockett, messenger to every Agriculture Secretary since 1913, and who is so proud of the Secretary that he goes on his own time to see to Wallace's wardrobe, read yesterday that the Secretary has some fine traits, but dresses "shabbily."

Crockett grabbed a telephone and was a little incoherent at first, but it amounted to this:

"I know there's not a better-dressed man in Washington. No man's got a finer wardrobe or looks better in his clothes. He changes his clothes every day.

"I'll bet he's got as good a wardrobe as the President," he ventured.

Crockett said he never had heard of such talk; that he was speaking because all morning people got after him, asked him why he let the Secretary look shabby.

The only explanation for such a rumor he could conceive was that the Secretary liked to walk to work, or go out in the mornings for exercise. "He likes his walks and that game he plays with a boomerang, and if a little rain comes up and wets his clothes he's not thinking about any clothes. He keeps his mind on his exercise. He just naturally likes his exercise, Crockett said.

"I'm proud of the Secretary. People reading that thing and getting after me.

"I'm saying now how it is. He's got a wardrobe!" he concluded, emphatically.

institutions," Chadwick said in a statement.

Irvin S. Cobb, writer, as "a life long Democrat," declared he would support Willkie and said that "if such anti-third term Presidents as Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, Buchanan and Wilson were alive it seems certain they would be for him."

Senator Burke, Nebraska Democrat who pledged his support Thursday to Willkie, forecast a national organization of Democrats opposed to a third term.

Burke said he had received scores of telegrams congratulating him upon his stand. One from James W. Mellen, of Los Angeles, said California had an organization of "Jeffersonian Democrats" and suggested a conference at some central point to form a national antithird term Democratic group.

Roland Hill, auditor in the General Accounting Office and 1935 president of the Washington Junior New Dealers Club, resigned from his job and said he would campaign for Willkie.

Charges Selfishness

Chadwick's statement said that "the Democratic Party as I knew it has no means of expression under that label. Its principles have been wholly abandoned by the brain trusters and New Dealers, a group of political opportunists who have taken over the Administration and selfishly seek to perpetuate themselves in office.

"Democratic principles as expressed in the national platform of 1932 are today exemplified by the Republican Party and its candidates. They alone offer the hope of economy in Government, and freedom from bureaucracy . . .

"The issue is Americanism as opposed to the New Dealers; the people against the self-perpetuating bureaucrats; America minding America's business, its strength and security."

On the other hand, Senator Hatch (Democrat), of New Mexico), one of the first delegates to return here from the Chicago convention, told the Associated Press that the "third-term issue will not play a very important part in this election."

The New Mexico Democrat lauded the nomination of Henry Wallace, Secretary of Agriculture, as President Roosevelt's running mate.

"I worked with Secretary Wallace for five days on the platform committee at Chicago and his nomination for the Vice Presidency is an excellent choice," Hatch said.

Senator Norris (Independent), of Nebraska, also praised the nomination of Wallace.

Lynchburg, S. C., July 19 (INS).—Senator Ellison D. ("Cotton Ed") Smith, whom President Roosevelt sought unsuccessfully to purge in 1938, tonight joined his Democratic colleague, Senator Edward Burke, of Nebraska, in revolt against the third-term aspirations of Mr. Roosevelt.

Characterizing the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket as "undemocratic," he declared:

"I am a Democrat and intend to continue a Democrat. But the men carrying the party banner are not Democrats—they are New Dealers. I have long been opposed to the New Deal and shall continue to oppose it."

Wallace to Quit, Stump Nation, Capital Hears

Likely Successor Reported to Be Rep. Marvin Jones

By the United Press

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace will resign from the Cabinet shortly in order to wage a vigorous campaign in his new role of Democratic Vice Presidential nominee, it was reported last night in usually reliable quarters.

Representative Marvin Jones, Texas Democrat, who as chairman of the House Agriculture Committee has piloted most New Deal farm legislation through the chamber, was reported to be under serious consideration for appointment as Wallace's successor.

Wallace, it was said, will discuss the proposed shift with President Roosevelt next week. It was reported that he plans to start a Nation-wide speaking tour about the middle of August.

Jones Has Inside Track

Congressional sources disclosed that Administration spokesmen approached Jones at the Chicago convention relative to his possible elevation to the Cabinet. They said also that several weeks ago, when it appeared that Wallace might resign in order to set up and direct the proposed all-American export cartel, Jones had the inside track for the Cabinet job.

[The choice of some New Deal officials for the post was reported to be Iowa-born Chester C. Davis, a member of the Federal Reserve Board who is handling farm problems for the Defense Commission.

[Jones' candidacy for the Cabinet job—if and when Wallace leaves it—was understood to have the backing of his committee colleagues, including Representative Pierce, of Oregon, and Orville Zimmerman, of Missouri.

[Davis, who told The Post yesterday that he had not heard his name suggested in connection with the possible Cabinet vacancy, was believed to have the backing of such White House intimates as Leon Henderson, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and the Defense Council.—Editor's note.]

Close to White House

Jones, 54, is a close friend of Mr. Roosevelt, who last spring nominated the Texan for a judgeship on the Court of Claims. The nomination was confirmed promptly, but a few days later Jones announced that, at the President's request, he would remain in Congress at least for a while. More recently, Jones indicated he would accept the Court of Claims membership before the end of the year.

Most observers feel that elevation of Jones to the Agriculture Secretaryship would aid the Administration from a political standpoint. He is well liked and respected in Congress and, it is believed, would be able to wield considerable pro-Administration influence at the Capitol. Furthermore, he is popular throughout the farm belt.

Farley to Resign Party Post Aug. 17

plain he was not "taking a walk," a la Al Smith. He offered full cooperation in organizing for the fight ahead, and he announced his intention of remaining in office as New York State Democratic chairman.

Applauded by reporters, with whom he ranks probably as the most popular man in political life, Farley later was tendered a reception in his honor by the hundreds of news men covering this convention. He was presented with a parting gift—a wrist watch.

A small golden baseball bat had been suggested, emblematic of his expected next job as head of the New York American League baseball club. But Farley at his press conference had asked to be excused from comment on that job at this time.

"Eight years ago in this city I was elected chairman of the Democratic National Committee," he told committeemen. "In the intervening years I have had the happiest associations with Democrats all over the country and my debt to the party can never be repaid.

"I have remained in public life at great financial sacrifice because I love politics. I have an opportunity now to accept an attractive offer in business and in justice to my family, because of my financial situation, I am going to accept.

Pledges His Full Support

"Before leaving I shall cooperate to the fullest extent with my successor as national chairman in setting up the machinery for the coming campaign. I have said repeatedly that the American people want the Democratic Party to remain in power. My opinion has not changed, and again I pledge my full support to the Roosevelt-Wallace ticket."

At the ensuing press conference Farley told newsmen he chose August 17 to retire because it comes at the end of the week "and I like to finish a week's work."

He was asked if he still was opposed to a third term.

"My position on that was well known," he replied.

"I now accept the action of the convention and pledge my support to the ticket."

But whether the President's third nomination acceptance speech was the famed "secret" he told Farley at Hyde Park, he never would tell newsmen directly.

"You're a pretty good newspaperman," he told his questioner.

But he did say he discussed with the President "all of the angles" of the action he was announcing today, and that was the reason he had said at the time his Hyde Park talk was a "satisfactory" conference. He said the President asked him to remain as chairman, but he explained his financial situation and why it would be impossible to do so.

Farley announced that the Democratic Party's active headquarters will be in the Biltmore Hotel in New York as in past Presidential campaigns.

But he balked at forecasting details of the outcome of the Democratic race against the Republican Willkie-McNary ticket.

He said he was handling only the routine work necessary to setting up the new headquarters, "and I don't think I should do any predicting."

Before adjourning the committee reelected S. L. W. (Chip) Robert, secretary; Oliver Quayle, treasurer, and Col. Edwin A. Halsey, who is secretary of the Senate, as sergeant at arms.

Named as a subcommittee to confer with the President on selection of a successor to Farley were Flynn, chairman; William Howes, of South Dakota; Mildred Jaster, of Ohio; Beatrice Cobb, of North Carolina, and David Fitzgerald, of Connecticut.

Kennedy Suggested

Besides Walker, who has been most prominently mentioned as next national chairman, others who have been discussed for the post include:

Senator Byrnes, of South Carolina, the President's convention floor manager, who, like Walker, does not want the job.

Ambassador to Britain Joseph P. Kennedy.

Leo Crowley, head of the SFDIC.

Harry L. Hopkins, Secretary of Commerce, and the President's third-term liaison officer here.

Farley told reporters he had heard all of these mentioned, but never Secretary of Interior Ickes, as suggested by one reporter.

The President has been a warm friend of Walker ever since they first met in 1920, when Walker was a young Montana lawyer on a reception committee for Roosevelt, then running for the Vice Presidency. He is now president of Publix-Comerford moving picture theater chain in New York and Pennsylvania. He was director of the old NEC.

The Gallup Poll

Willkie Has Slight Lead Over Roosevelt In Returns From Empire State Survey

By Dr. George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., July 20.—Wendell Willkie, the Republican nominee, has a slight lead over President Roosevelt in the returns from a new survey of New York State—home State of both candidates—which has just been completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

DR. GALLUP

While it is still too early to determine the outcome in November, the New York next Institute's first measurement of sentiment since Mr. Willkie's nomination—but prior to the Democratic nomination at Chicago—shows Willkie has gotten off to a head-start in the State.

Voters throughout the State were asked:

"If President Roosevelt runs for a third term on the Democratic ticket against Wendell Willkie on the Republican ticket, how would you vote?"

The answers of those reached in a carefully selected cross-section of New York voters are:

WILLKIE	51%
ROOSEVELT	49%

Approximately one voter in seven (14 per cent) said he was undecided how he would cast his vote in such circumstances.

A Political Bellwether

New York State's political leanings will be important throughout the coming campaign not only because New York is the home State of both Mr. Willkie and President Roosevelt but also because the State accounts for 47 electoral votes, making it the largest political prize in the country.

It is important to remember that the present survey of New York voters was conducted before the Democratic Convention reached its decision this week. New tests of Democratic-Republican strength are now under way in each of the 48 States and will be reported shortly in The Washington Post.

G. O. P. Gains in N. Y.

At the present time, however, there can be no question but that the Republican Party has gained substantially in New York State since the Presidential election of 1936. Institute surveys, together with the results of the 1938 Lehman-Dewey gubernatorial race, help to chart the political trend in the State:

	Democrat	Republican
1936 Presidential election	60%	40%
1938 gubernatorial election	51	49
Institute survey—March	53	47
Institute survey today	49	51

Secretary Sails From Miami After Setting Forth Aims

Miami, Fla., July 19.—Secretary of State Hull left United States soil tonight to promote among American republics a "common cause" which he said was "wholly divorced from any thought of aggrandizement or domination" and was open to any nation willing to cooperate on that basis.

Before boarding an overnight boat for Havana to attend a meeting of foreign ministers of the 21 American nations, he summed up the aims of this country as a desire "that the calamities of other parts of the world may not reach our shores to any greater extent than they have through the dislocation of trade and commerce and of free interchange of things worth while."

Sets Forth Aims

It was the 58-year-old Secretary of State's first trip out of the country since the European War began and his first visit to Cuba since he went there as a captain in the Tennessee volunteers in the Spanish-American War.

Greeted at the railway station by a group of Miami and Miami Beach officials late today, Hull set out in a brief talk the purpose of his delegation to the Havana meeting.

Of the other American republics, he asserted they were "all friends in a common cause," having as its purpose promotion of friendship and cooperation "among nations wholly divorced from any thought of aggrandizement or domination."

And this, he said, "applies not only to the American republics, but to every nation of the world that is willing to meet us on that basis."

The Havana meeting, called at the suggestion of the United States to consider vital problems of hemisphere economy and defense after the German invasion of the Low Countries, will open Sunday afternoon with an address by the President of Cuba.

Hull to Speak Monday

The main business will get under way Monday with speeches by various foreign ministers, including Secretary Hull, and the setting up of committees.

The hopes of the United States delegation for unanimity on all measures adopted to protect the hemisphere against military or economic threats appeared to depend largely on the attitude of Argentina, which has indicated some reluctance to take a stand that might jeopardize its future trade with the totalitarian nations.

U. S. Orders $20,000,000 Of Gunpowder

DuPont Plant, Not Yet Built, to Turn Out Explosive

The Army yesterday placed a $20,000,000 order for smokeless powder with a plant which is as yet unbuilt.

In a move which some officials said was illustrative of the speed of the whole defense program, Assistant War Secretary Louis Johnson signed a contract with E. I. duPont de Nemours and Co. for powder to be produced at a new factory at Charlestown, Ind.

As with most other munitions, facilities for manufacturing powder are very limited and in obtaining the huge quantities required by the defense program, a start has to be made from scratch. Under an agreement reached only two days ago, the duPonts will construct a factory which will treble the Nation's existing powder production capacity.

By placing the first order now, it was said, materials can be purchased now, and some time saved.

The contract was the largest on a list of awards announced by the War Department totaling $32,264,951, for ordnance, aircraft, equipment and post construction.

An undisclosed number of twin-motor advanced training planes will be purchased under a $900,378 order placed with the Cessna Aircraft Co., of Wichita, Kans. The first of such type, they will be used at a new school at Ellington Field, Tex., for training pilots and mechanics to operate large bombing planes.

Meanwhile, Secretary Stimson addressed a message to the military and civilian employes of the Army, expressing his pleasure at returning to a post he held in the Taft Administration.

"It is a great pleasure to be again associated with you in the national defense," he stated. "In the strenuous days ahead there is a tremendous amount of work for all of us. The prompt strengthening of our country's defenses requires our best and most intelligent efforts."

Promotion Rule Waived

Stimson at the same time issued a ruling waiving physical examinations on the promotion of officers, where the prior annual examination was satisfactory. The step was taken, it was said, to save time of officers busy with defense duties.

A total of 466 special trains will be required to transport some 132,901 troops to war games next month, the War Secretary stated. A total of 5,283 railroad cars will take about one-third of the participating troops from home stations to the maneuver grounds.

Institutions Offer Aid to 50 Refugee Youth

D. C. Schools Among Agencies Planning Temporary Shelter

Washington institutions have estimated that they can provide for about 50 refugee children pending placement in foster homes, it was disclosed yesterday as a number of families wanting to adopt child refugees made application to the Council of Social Agencies.

Schools made known that they could care for a large number of child refugees temporarily, Mrs. John Jay O'Connor, chairman of the Washington committee was told by Mrs. Milton King, chairman of the Child Care Sub-committee.

All applications for children should be sent to the council, at 1101 M street northwest. Each application will be investigated by social workers.

When the children would begin arriving was not known to the executive committee of the Washington Branch for the Care of European Children, the Council of Social Agencies group that met yesterday. The organization emphasized that it was making no move toward bringing the children here, but was simply making preparations in event of their arrival.

A preliminary investigation of the desirability of a profered home is made at the time of its offer. A subsequent investigation will be made by a committee headed by Miss Mildred Terrett, of the Children's Protective Association.

Mrs. King said that all investigations so far are being made by social workers associated with the council and child caring agencies who volunteered their time during the emergency. Their regular work is not interrupted, it was said.

Mrs. Stuart Rice, chairman of the information sub-committee, said that her group was specifically formed to aid in bringing to America children with friends or relatives here.

Prospective foster parents were reminded that it would be helpful if they filled out a precise statement of their ability to care for children. Existing regulations specify that refugee children must have a definite promise of a financially responsible home.

Closer Axis Ties Expected By Japanese

Premier Konoye Holds Long Conference With Cabinet Chiefs

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, July 19.—A new and sharper Japanese foreign policy, one expected to lead to closer association with the Rome-Berlin Axis, was formulated today by the inner government of the new totalitarian-type regime of Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye.

Prince Konoye declined details of a long conference of cabinet leaders, but those closely watching the effects of Europe's war in the Far East held it was certain that Japan, before taking any expansionist action, first would seek an understanding with Germany.

This was held to be particularly true of French Indo-China and the Netherlands East Indies.

(In German-occupied Amsterdam, a German spokesman declared that mistreatment of Germans in Dutch East and West Indies "obliged" Germany, with "regret" to act in reprisal.)

Konoye said today's conference touched on relations with the United States, Great Britain and Russia and that "complete agreement was reached."

This statement followed the assertion of Yakichiro Suma, foreign office spokesman, that Japan wanted more friendly relations with the United States but would not be diplomatically humble to get them.

U. S. Will Give Up China Rights 'When Conditions Warrant'

Welles, Commenting on Burma Road Speech of Churchill, Announces Readiness To Relinquish 'Extraterritorial' Privileges

The United States joined Great Britain yesterday in saying that it was ready "whenever conditions warrant" to negotiate with China to relinquish special rights in that country.

Sumner Welles, Acting Secretary of State, outlined the American position in comment on Prime Minister Churchill's explanation to the British House of Commons on the closing of the Burma route for shipments to China.

"It has been this Government's traditional and declared policy and desire," he said, "to move rapidly by process of orderly negotiation and agreement with the Chinese government, whenever conditions warrant, toward the relinquishment of extraterritorial rights and of all other so-called 'special rights' possessed by this country as by other countries in China by virtue of international agreements.

"That policy remains unchanged."

The treaty right of extraterritoriality permits Americans to be tried in their own courts. The additional "special rights" include the Shanghai International Settlement.

Welles noted that the United States and several other governments were negotiating with China in 1931, on the question, when there occurred the Mukden incident which set off Sino-Japanese fighting.

Again in 1937, Welles noted, the United States was "giving renewed favorable consideration" to the question when the current Sino-Japanese hostilities started.

Italo-Spanish Drive Hinted On Gibraltar

Fascists Think Rome Will Support Franco Claims to Fortress

By the United Press

Rome, July 19.—Fascist quarters intimated tonight that Italy is prepared to support Spain's claims on Gibraltar, perhaps with warships and planes, after disclosure in an official communique that Italian aircraft had "satisfactorily bombed" Great Britain's rocky fortress.

The communique said Italian planes which bombed Gibraltar made a 2,000-mile flight to carry out their attack and returned without losses.

The sinking of a British submarine in the western Mediterranean and the damaging of an unidentified British ship in the Straits of Sicily so badly that it was abandoned by its crew also were claimed officially.

Spanish Aid Predicted

The communique declaring Italian planes bombed Gibraltar Thursday, only 24 hours after Gen. Franco sternly voiced Spain's claim to the "rock," was viewed in well-informed fascist quarters as heralding an imminent large-scale attack on the fortress.

In this attack, fascists predicted, Spanish forces probably will participate alongside the Italians.

Military quarters here contend that with modern methods of warfare Britain's famous rock lost its offensive powers without the support of a neutral Spain.

They contend that Italy could unleash a concerted attack by sea and air while Spain would open up with big guns mounted in the fortifications of Algeciras, La Linea and Ceuta across the straits in Spanish Morocco.

General Intimates Attack

These assaults, Fascists said, would smash the rock to bits as well as the harbor and probably put Gibraltar's land fortifications out of operation, thereby forcing surrender.

Gen. Ilio Jori, writing in Corriere Padano, intimated that a widespread Italian offensive in the Mediterranean area is being planned to synchronize with Germany's onslaught against the British Isles.

A reported remark by a British radio announcer that Cyprus would become Britain's principal naval base in the Mediterranean if the British were forced to withdraw from Malta, and Gibraltar was cited in Rome as having great significance.

Luxembourg's Prince, Children On Way to Haven in U. S.

The Prince Consort Felix of Luxembourg and his six children, en route to the United States aboard the U. S. S. Trenton, will be guests at the Long Island estate of Joseph E. Davies, special assistant to the Secretary of State, it was learned yesterday.

Announcement that the American official would be host to the royal party was given The Post by Hughes le Gallais, Luxembourg Charge d'Affaires.

Davies, before his present assignment in Washington, was Ambassador to Belgium and Minister to Luxembourg.

The Charge d'Affaires said "His Royal Highness the Prince of Luxembourg has brought all his children to the United States to place them in schools in view of the unsettled conditions in Europe and the prospects of hardships which may be encountered there this winter."

The Davies have "very kindly placed the Long Island estate at the disposal of their Royal Highnesses," he said. They will be there "for the present."

When the party will arrive in the United States has not been announced by the State Department.

Japan Asks Punishment Of Marines in Cafe Row

Shanghai (Saturday), July 20 (U.P.). Japanese Consul General Yoshiaki Miura has delivered a note to acting United States Consul General Richard P. Butrick requesting indemnification and punishment of three United Sates marines who allegedly attacked a group of Japanese civilians in the Japanese-owned Oriental Cafe the night of July 14.

The note reserves the right to claim damages but does not request a formal apology as the Japanese did in their protests against temporary arrest of 16 Japanese gendarmes by United States marines a fortnight ago.

Son of German Plane Designer To Study in U. S.

Special Dispatch to The Post

New York, July 19.—Claude Dornier, jr., plane pilot and son of Germany's outstanding designer and builder of giant flying boats and long-range bombers, is residing in New York City and plans to enter an American university in the fall.

The Dornier DO-X, 12-motored transport, flew from Germany to New York in 1931; squadrons of all-metal Dornier monoplane bombers now are being massed for the "Battle of Britain."

Dornier came to the United States last July on a visitor's permit after graduating with honors from a German technical institution. He went to Detroit, where, for several months, he served without salary in automotive plants studying assembly-line production methods.

Teachers in State Schools Sovietized, Texan Charges

Beaumont, Tex., July 19 (AP).—Sheriff Chis P. Fox of El Paso told the Dies Committee today that many teachers and student leaders in State-supported institutions were members of the Communist Party.

His testimony came after another witness said that "absolute social equality" of Negroes and white persons was a Communist Party objective.

Chairman Martin Dies (Democrat), of Texas, of the House Committee Investigating un-American Activities, is conducting the one-man hearing.

Names of professors and students, including virtually the entire membership of the basketball and football teams of one State school, punctuated Fox's testimony.

Chang's assassination "is the manner in which Japan intends to intimidate American interests even in the International Settlement," his brother-in-law, Dr. Ernest King, a member of the Food and Drug Administration here and a commissioned officer in the U. S. Army Medical Corps Reserve, said last night.

Dr. King, who visited Chang in Shanghai in 1938, said that his brother-in-law had been warned several times by Japanese agents to cease his journalistic activities with the American-owned daily Ta-Mei-Wan-Pao, the only newspaper which continued printing "against Japanese aggression."

"The paper was the sole source of news which maintained the morale of the millions of Chinese people living in the International Settlement of Shanghai," said Dr. King. "My brother-in-law never would give up the fight for freedom even though a human arm was sent to him in the mail and he was warned he would be beheaded. He had not quit his journalistic activities when he was killed."

Typical, Small-Town Life Epitomized In 'Our Town,' at Loew's Capitol

Wilder Prize Play Adapted to Screen In Unique Form; Rousing Stage Bill

"OUR TOWN." Sol Lesser's picturization for United Artists of the Thornton Wilder Pulitzer Prize play, adapted to the screen by the author, Frank Craven and Harry Chandlee, starring William Holden and Martha Scott, with Fay Bainter, Beulah Bondi, Thomas Mitchell, Frank Craven and Guy Kibbee, with Stuart Erwin, Doro Merande, Philip Wood, Ruth Toby, Douglas Gardner, Arthur Allen, Charles Trowbridge and Spencer Charters. Directed by Sam Wood. At Loew's Capitol Theater.

CAPTURING THE SPIRIT, if not completely the form, of the original stage version of Thorton Wilder's Pulitzer Prize play, "Our Town," currently on the screen at Loew's Capitol Theater, in film form reasserts the power it exerted behind the footlights. It is a simple drama of unpretentious, small-town American life, instinct with gentle humors, impulses and emotions that are fundamental and universal. The New Hampshire village of Grovers Corners might be a town of 2,000 inhabitants anywhere in the United States—or the world, for that matter. The ingredients of Mr. Wilder's play know no geographical boundaries.

BELL

It is the whole story of human existence that is told here—the inevitable cycle of "life, love and death"—with homely and natural folk as its protagonists. The author has centered interest in the households of next-door neighbors—those of Dr. Gibbs and Editor Webb—but all of Grovers Corners are important characters in the actual or implied course of life in a community where all have lived all of their lives. These lives are pursued without great physical excitement, but with all of the psychological and spiritual conflict necessary to a rounded drama of intense realism and deep-rooted power.

Events so commonplace as to be taken for granted by most of us have been galvanized into factors of great emotional appeal by the author's skill in molding his characters and fashioning the events in which they are principally concerned.

The daylight awakening of a sleepy town, with the delivery of the morning milk and the daily newspaper; the courtship of George Gibbs and Emily Webb, the village choir practice, the wedding and the simple matters of getting the daily meals and hustling the children off to school comprise scenes that are memorable in their fidelity to actuality. The poignant last act of the stage play has been relieved of much of its somber mood on the screen by resort to a dream sequence that permits Emily Webb to live and assure the pictured incidents a "happy ending." This slight deviation from the development of the original work has been deftly wrought, although perhaps a little too precipitately to achieve quite the same emotional impact. It is in this concession to the public's abhorrence of death alone that those who have seen both will deem the film play inferior to the stage version.

While "Our Town" was presented on the boards without stage settings or "props," full use is made of complete settings and "commodities of the drama" in the camera version. The conspicuous figure of Mr. Morgan, nevertheless, still is made the narrator of what is about to occur as the play unfolds. As guide, as well as an essential figure in the action, he continues to bob up in unexpected places to give the film something the flavor of a personally conducted tour. Frank Craven, who originated the part in the original Pulitzer Prize production, continues in the role, a little superfluously but no less effectively.

The principals in this unusual drama, directed with such sensitiveness and sentimental charm by Sam Wood, have been chosen with a fine eye to "type." William Holden and Martha Scott, who repeats her stage portrayal of Emily Webb, are the young lovers. Dr. and Mrs. Gibbs are flawlessly impersonated by Thomas Mitchell and Fay Bainter and Mr. and Mrs. Webb, no less efficiently by Guy Kibbee and Beulah Bondi. Stuart Erwin is the Howie Newsome, the milkman, and Philip Wood the suicide choir-leader. Spencer Charters, Charles Trowbridge and the others in support never violate the integrity of a great play.

The "Flight of Stars" stage revue at the Capitol this week embraces three smash hits. One is scored by Little Jackie Heller, the diminutive singing star, who acts as master of ceremonies; another by The Oxford Boys, with their extraordinary vocal impressions of popular orchestras, and the third by The Colstons, brother and sister, in their distinctive comedy dancing. Each in turn stopped the show at yesterday's first performance. Cherie and Thomasita, dancers; the Rhythm Rockets, Sam Jack Kaufman's symphonic "Smoke Gets in Your Eyes" overture, Art Brown's singfest turn, at the organ, and the Fox Movietone News complete an entertainment of solid merit.

Tinted Nails

Claudette Colbert has almost forgotten how she looks on the screen with tinted fingernails. Her latest picture was "Drums Along the Mohawk," far back in history when women didn't even put polish on their nails. Now she is working in "Boom Town" with Clark Gable, Spencer Tracy and Hedy Lamarr at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The story opens in 1920 and, while women went in for manicures and nail polish, they used bright tints.

Metropolitan Offers Star Cast In a New 'Bill of Divorcement'

By Richard L. Coe

"A BILL OF DIVORCEMENT." RKO-Radio picturization of the play by Clemence Dane, adapted to the screen by Dalton Trumbo, with Maureen O'Hara, Adolphe Menjou, Fay Bainter, Herbert Marshall, Dame May Whitty, Patric Knowles, C. Aubrey Smith, Ernest Cossart, Kathryn Collier and Lauri Beatty. Directed by John Farrow. Reviewed Friday afternoon. At the Metropolitan Theater.

Stunningly cast and impeccably produced, the screen's third version of the celebrated Clemence Dane drama, "A Bill of Divorcement" is nonetheless as ineffectual as a promotion for the No. 2 man in the Nazi setup. Despite its distinguished company, the Metropolitan's story of a father's insanity lacks vitality.

Maureen O'Hara is hauntingly lovely as Sydney Fairfield, the role which brought celebrity to Katharine Hepburn in its previous screen version and to Katharine Cornell in its first American stage production. Hers is the role of the vital young woman who denounces her own love when she learns that the father whom she thought to have been shell-shocked all her life has in fact been insane, an hereditary taint. It is a rich role and the young Irish player endows it with sensitive understanding.

Miss Dane's problem is a mercifully isolated one, an inherent limitation for the film to overcome. An attractive, middle-aged woman has divorced her mentally unbalanced husband and is to marry a man in whom she has been interested for some years. Her daughter believes the father insane as a result of World War shell-shock but a domineering aunt of his side of the family reveals to her that his mental breakdown is in the Fairfield blood. Apparently cured, the father has escaped his keepers, returns to his home but suffers intolerably when he learns of his wife's plans for remarriage. The daughter decides to sacrifice her own marriage, a union which she feels can never bear fruit, and to remain as her father's companion, allowing her mother to begin her life afresh.

This somber story enlists the services of that admirable actress Fay Bainter as the mother; the equally skillfull Dame May Whitty as the dominating aunt; Adolphe Menjou, as the deranged father, and Herbert Marshall as the man the mother wishes to marry. C. Aubrey Smith and Ernest Cossart bring their skilled British reserve to lend the climactic scenes solidity and well-bred dignity. It is, as we have said, a stunning cast, performing knowingly.

A lurking sense that this story is dated lies in the too emphatically defined attempts of Sydney to be "modern;" her attitude on children and adoption would now be taken as a matter of course, of natural independence and not as a headstrong notion over which her father's disease casts the shadow of insanity. Then, too, this season we have seen two comedies, "My Favorite Wife" and "Too Many Husbands," treat similar connubial reappearances with light abandon. Such a problem in the 1940's cannot be looked on with such grim hopelessness when the large-scale troubles around us seem to dwarf such personal problems.

The short subjects at the Metropolitan this week are certainly not models of their kind. A Technicolor telling of Buffalo Bill Cody's early days with the Pony Express and that rapid transit's effect on the West's portion of the Civil War tries to cram in no end of details in capsule form. Another color short depicts the work of habilitation which the Dust Bowl refugees are doing in Alaska's Matanuska. "Tom Thumb in Trouble" is the color cartoon. The combined Paramount and Universal newsreels report on the Democratic convention and on the vacationing Mr. Willkie.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, July 19.

WHEN WENDELL WILLKIE went to the Music Hall, to see himself in the "Information Please" movie short, he was escorted there by Dan Golenpaul, producer of the radio program . . . Side by side they walked up Broadway—and a sidewalk photographer took their picture . . . The photographer then learned that his subject had been Wendell Willkie. He rushed after the Republican nominee, and asked for his autograph. Willkie agreed, and the cameraman presented a card, which Willkie signed . . . He delivered it to the photographer, who informed that the card was an order for the picture he had snapped. "Don't forget, Mr. Willkie," he reminded, "you can get six of these for $1."

THE NOMINATION of President Roosevelt cost his son, Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr., at least $5. Two months ago, when F. D., jr., stated that he didn't believe his father would run for a third term, I dissented—and we made the $5 bet . . . Al Jolson was hurt in Chicago Wednesday, but won't close the show—although he'll have to use crutches. Ruby Keeler has delivered her two-week notice, although she has a run-of-the-play contract . . . Jim Braddock is resuming his training, and will issue a challenge to Jack Dempsey . . . Lord Beaverbrook wrote to Dick Merrill, indicating that the flier's services would be welcomed in London. Merrill was eager to accept, but an aviation official here ruled against it.

LAST YEAR LEILA GAYNES, of the 18 Club, was a passenger in an auto which cracked up. Her jaw was fractured, her face was disfigured—but she survived, and plastic surgery helped restore her face to the pretty contours it always has had . . . Her suit for damages, resulting from the auto smashup, was finally settled, for $7,500 . . . Leila paid her medical bills, lawyer's fees, bought some clothes, and with the balance of the money she purchased the one thing she always had wanted—a car for herself . . . Driving that car, last week, she was in another smashup, in Warwick, N. Y. Two of the passengers were killed. And Leila, her face again disfigured, is in the Warwick Hospital.

LADY MENDL lunched at the Colony and brought two of her dogs inside, to be seated next to her, against the wall. When the management protested Lady Mendl declared: "I was invited, and so were my dogs. If they don't stay to be served neither will I." They were served . . . BMI, the song-writing organization formed in opposition to ASCAP, lists among its unrecognized lyricists the name of Franklin D. Roosevelt, jr. . . . For the first time since Henry Armstrong has been fighting, Al Jolson didn't bet on him, in Wednesday night's bout . . . Harold Rome, whose "The F. D. R. Way" will be the campaign song for the Democrats, presented it to the party. Last spring the Republicans asked Rome to write a campaign song for them, for a fee, and he refused.

GILBERT MILLER, the producer, went to the pier when the Washington arrived to meet some friends who were disembarking . . . Miller, who had been a transatlantic commuter, kept muttering, somewhat dazedly: "I don't believe that the Germans have Paris, I just don't believe it" . . . Then down the gangplank came Irving Marx, the theatrical agent who worked in Paris for almost 20 years, representing every star from Sascha Guitry to Maurice Chevalier . . . Marx, to whose suite at the George V Hotel came every theatrical figure who ever visited Paris . . . "Look, Gilbert there's Irving Marx," Miller was told . . . "Now I know," sighed Miller, "that the Germans have Paris."

THE CALIFORNIA delegate who was knocked down and trampled upon at the Democratic Convention during the melee when some of the Texans refused to join the parade for FDR, was Melvyn Douglas, the screen star. Douglas required police assistance . . . Walter Millis, Erika Mann and Stephen Vincent Benet are contributing to a book called "Zero Hour," which will be published next month . . . Henry Luce has written the foreword to "Why England Slept," the new book written by Jack Kennedy, son of Ambassador Joe Kennedy.

DURING A RECENT HEAT WAVE, Chief Magistrate Curran sipped hot coffee in a downtown restaurant . . . "Your Honor, that's too hot a drink in this kind of weather," a friend advised. "What you really want is an iced drink—a sharp one. Did you ever try rye and ginger ale? Now, that's a drink. Did you ever try it?" . . . "No," confessed the chief magistrate, "but I have tried several fellows who have."

'All This and Heaven Too' Enters Second Week on Earle Screen

"All This and Heaven Too," the Warner Brothers' faithful picturization of the novel of the same name by Rachel Field, yesterday entered its second week on the screen at the Earle Theater, with apparently no diminution in public interest in a story that is vividly romantic and thrilling, splendidly acted and impeccably staged and directed.

Based on actual occurences in England and France years ago, this subject is at base a "murder story," but with its more turbulent moments so subordinated to a minute and engaging examination of unhappy home life and a great, though unprofessed love, that it assumes the stature of dignified and compelling drama involving many lives. As has been suggested here before, those who view "All This and Heaven Too" will discover that it has much in common with "We Are Not Alone," an earlier production starring Paul Muni and Jane Bryan.

Told by the "flashback" method, the Field drama early betrays its moderately happy ending. In the relation of her life story, however, Mlle. Henriette Deluzy Desportes traces the groundwork of developments that are consistently interesting, if not always completely engrossing or even gay. It is in this part that Bette Davis presents another of her finest characterizations—one that some already are saying will win her a third Academy Award.

In the opposite, costellar role of the Duc de Praslin, Charles Boyer becomes an actor of serious mien, instead of his habitual romantic lover, and offers a performance that matches Miss Davis'. Not one whit less effective, although considerably more flamboyant is Barbara O'Neil's portrayal of the Duches de Preslin, whose violent death brings about the trial that forms the climax of the play.

Outstanding as these three pivotal players are, they do not at all overshadow the distinguished character of their support.

The brief "Top Hats and Tails" stage revue continues a second week with the screen feature. Its bright particular stars are the New Yorkers, a double mixed quartet; Betty Bruce, exceptional dancer from the cast of "Keep Off the Grass," and Jeanne Lanier, songstress. The Roxyettes, of course, are conspicuously present in more than one colorful routine. A new newsreel is on view to round out a superlative program.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Well, I finally found out what starts the ball rolling in the new Frank Capra picture, "Meets Joe Doe." Barbara Stanwyck, just fired from her job as columnist on a Midwest newspaper, decides to give the paper some fireworks, so she writes herself a scathing letter, signing it "John Doe," a disgusted citizen who says he's fed up because the world is going to pot, and that the reason he can't get a job is that people are too greedy in their own interests—so he's going to jump off a roof.

HOPPER

Barbara puts it in her final column, with her own comment, "If you ask me, the wrong people are jumping off roofs." Then the fun begins. Gary Cooper is a hobo who comes to say he's the guy who was going to jump. But in the meantime, a job has been offered to keep the man from doing it, and everyone in the State has been trying to find somebody who actually doesn't exist. The end of the picture is still a mystery, even to Frank Capra.

If Wendell Willkie can, he's going to spend a week-end at Yucca Loma Ranch, near Victorville, with his friend George Denny, jr., president of the Town Hall, where Willkie made his first radio appearance in 1938 in a debate with Attorney General Robert Jackson. After appearing on "Information Please," Willkie sent his check of $150 to Denny and said, "Add this to the Endowment Fund—you gave me my chance on the air."

Speaking of air, Freddie March, now that he has a sustaining show, has borrowed Orson Welles' method of having the company record the program so he can tear it apart. But Orson knows how to put it together again. Orson, incidentally, has picked for "Citizen Kane" Linda Winters, once under contract for Warners. She came out of a little theater.

They do say that N. B. C. in Hollywood 'ook in more money from the tourist trade last year than was taken in by the sales department.

King Vidor has certainly had his troubles. He got a special court order and went through the European war zone to bring his children back to America. His former wife, Eleanor Boardman, who recently married Harry D'Arrast, arrived in town a few weeks ago. She called up former husband King, said she was lonely, and would he let the children come down to her hotel for a little visit. He did, and I understand he hasn't been able to see them since.

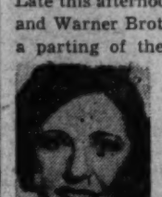
Paramount has been swamped with telegrams, phone calls, and pictures of twins to play Wayne Morris and his brother at the age of two weeks, in "Touchdown." They haven't decided on any yet. Don't send pictures to me—get in touch with Tony Veiller at Paramount. He's still looking.

"All you need is an idea," says Mr. Ramsdell, vice president of the Borden Milk Co., now here chaperoning his favorite "oomph" girl, Elsie, the cow. To increase sales, he searched for a cow, not with the best pedigree nor the greatest milk-giver, but with the most glamour. Elsie was the answer to his prayer. And their sales increased $8,000,000 last year!

Louella O. Parsons'

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, July 19 (INS).—Late this afternoon Paul Muni and Warner Brothers came to a parting of the ways. Although Paul's contract still calls for $800,000, he steps out of Warners without accepting a penny. He was advised to do so by his agent, M. C. Levee. The trouble was over "High Sierra," the W. A. Burnett story, which Muni turned down. He wanted to do "The Life of Beethoven," and Warners believe at this time they cannot make any money with a biography of this type.



LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Muni has been one of Warner's outstanding stars and two years ago won the Academy Award for his work in "The Life of Emile Zola."

Muni's decision to leave Warners makes the old axiom, "A prophet is without honor in his own country," come true. Suddenly, Warners have discovered Humphrey Bogart, and from now on he is going to be one of their top men—and rightly, for Bogey is a swell actor. He gets the Muni role in "High Sierra," costarring with Ida Lupino. Raoul Walsh, who directed Ida and Humphrey in "They Drive by Night," is the director. Arthur Kennedy and Henry Travers will have feature roles.

What a surprise! William Dieterle, who has directed many of Warners' best pictures, among them the Academy Award winning "The Life of Emile Zola," "The Story of Louis Pasteur," "Juarez." "Dr. Erhlich's Magic Bullet" and others, today asked for and obtained his release from Warners. Dieterle has just finished "The Man From Fleet Street," and although his contract had a year to run he asked Jack Warner for his freedom. He has created a unique position in Hollywood by making box office successes of biographical and sociological pictures, but he feels he has made enough, and his grievance against Warners was that he did not want to be typed. His contract ends officially July 26—exactly ten years to the day he joined Warner Brothers.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Greta Garbo went social the other eve and gave a party in honor of the Alex Wennergrans, friends from Sweden. They are the people who own the Southern Cross which picked up the Lubitsch baby; don't be surprised if Fritz Feld, famous character actor, and Virginia Craft, U. C. L. A. graduate, announce their engagement; the Frances Robinson-Robert Riskin romance is really at fever heat. They were twoing at the Matty Malneck-opening at Victor Hugo's; saw Mrs. Wayne Morris, her mother and Baron Polan at a table for three; Jane Wyman, Ronald Reagan, Kay Kyser and a very pretty girl with the Jules Steins.

David Lipton left today for Coffeyville, Kans., to arrange for the premiere of "When the Daltons Rode." Dave said: "You suggested Coffeyville in your column, and here it is;" Eddie Sutherland planed to Syracuse for the opening of "The Boys from Syracuse;"

never saw two happier people than the John Randolph Hearsts, who expect the stork in December; the Johnny Weismullers have built an elaborate nursery for their expected arrival in September.

Gene Towne and Lucia Carroll, formerly Lucia Le Cert, a twosome at the Bar of Music opening.

That's all today. See you tomorrow!

Partial Text of Hitler's Address, Making 'Last Appeal' for Peace

Conquest of Norway Called 'Boldest Stroke' by Fuehrer

By the Associated Press

New York, July 19.—Following is a partial text of the German official translator's version of Adolf Hitler's address as transcribed by the National Broadcasting Co. and the Columbia Broadcasting System.

Members of the Reichstag:

I have summoned you to this meeting in the midst of our tremendous struggle for the freedom and the future of the German nation. I have done so, firstly, because I consider it important to give our own people an insight into the events unique in history that lie behind us.

Secondly, because I wish to express my gratitude to our magnificent soldiers, and thirdly, with the intention of appealing once more and for the last time to common sense in general.

If we compare the cause which prompted this historic struggle of the magnitude of the far-reaching effects of military events, we are forced to the conclusion that its general course and the sacrifices it has entailed are out of all proportion to the alleged reasons for its outbreak, unless they were nothing but a pretext for underlying intentions.

The program of the National Socialist movement insofar as it depicted the future development of the Reich's relations with the rest of the world, was simply an attempt to bring about a definite revision of the Treaty of Versailles, though as far as at all possible, this was to be accomplished by peaceful means. This revision was absolutely essential.

Men of Insight Uttered Warnings

The conditions imposed in Versailles were intolerable . . .

Men of insight, even amongst our foes, were uttering warnings about the terrible consequences which the ruthless application of its insane conditions would entail . . .

Their objections and protests were silenced by the assurance that the statutes of the newly created League of Nations provided for the revision of these conditions . . .

Unfortunately, the Geneva Institution, as those responsible for Versailles had intended, never looked upon itself as a body competent to undertake any sensible revision, but from the outset as nothing more than the guarantor of the ruthless enforcement and maintenance of conditions imposed at Versailles.

All attempts made by democratic Germany to obtain equality for German people by revision of the treaty proved unavailing . . .

Owing to a rare misfortune, the German Empire, between 1914 and 1918, lacked good leadership. To this end and to the as yet unenlightened faith and trust placed by the German people in the words of democratic statesmen, our fall was due.

Hence, the Franco-British claim that the dictate at Versailles was a sort of international supreme code of laws appeared to be nothing more than a piece of intolerant arrogance to every honest German.

The assumption, however, that British or French statesmen should actually claim to be the guardians of justice and even of human culture is mere stupid effrontery, a piece of effrontery that is thrown in sufficiently glaring light by their own extremely negligible achievements in this direction . . .

The program of the National Socialist movement, besides freeing the Reich from the innermost fetters of a small substratum of Jewish capitalistic and plutocratic democratic profiteers, proclaimed to the world our resolution to shake off the shackles of the Versailles dictate. Germany's demands for this revision were a vital necessity and essential to the existence and honor of every great nation, and it probably one day will be regarded by posterity as extremely reasonable.

Munich Agreement Condemned As Weakness

In practice, all these demands had to be carried through, contrary to the will of the Franco-British rulers. We all regarded it as a sure sign of successful leadership in the Third Reich and, for years we were able to effect this revision without a war. . . .

Thanks to growing common sense, it highly appeared as though international cooperation might lead to a peaceful solution of the remaining problems. The agreement to this end, signed in Munich on September 29, 1938, by the four leading interested states, was not only not welcomed in London and Paris, but was actually condemned as a sign of abominable weakness.

Now that peaceful revision threatened to be crowned with success, the Jewish capitalist warmongers, their hands stained with blood, saw their tangible pretext for realizing their diabolical plans vanish into thin air. Once again we witnessed a conspiracy of wretched corruptible political creatures and money-grabbing financial magnates for whom war was a welcome means of furthering their business aims.

Jews and Free Masons, armament manufacturers and war profiteers, international businessmen, stock exchange jugglers, seized upon political hirelings of the desperate type that described war as something infinitely desirable. It was through the work of these criminal persons that the Polish state was spurred on to an attitude that was out of all proportion to Germany's demands and still left with attendant consequences.

Mr. Churchill and the rest of the warmongers had felt a fraction of the responsibility toward Europe which inspired me they could never have begun their insane game. It was only due to the machinations of these other European and non-European powers that Poland rejected my proposals which in no way affected its honor or existence, and instead resorted to a course which entailed terror and destruction . . .

On September 2 the conflict might still have been averted. Mussolini proposed to plan for immediate cessation of all hostilities and for a peaceful negotiation. Though Germany saw her armies storming to victory, nevertheless accepted this proposal. It was only the Franco-British warmongers who desired war, not peace. More than that, as Mr. Chamberlain said, they needed a long war because they had now invested their capital in armament shares and purchased machinery for the development of their business interests and the amortization of their investments. For, after all, what do these citizens of the world care about Poles, Czechs or such peoples?

Documents of Unique Historical Significance

On June 19, 1940, a German soldier found a curious document when searching some railway trucks standing in a station at (jumbled). As the documents bore a distinctive inscription, he immediately handed it to his commanding officer. It was then passed on to other quarters where it was soon realized that we had lighted on an important discovery.

The station was subjected to another more thoroughgoing search. Thus it was that the German high command gained the possession of a collection of documents of unique historical significance.

They were the secret documents of the Allied supreme war council and included the minutes of every meeting held by this illustrious body. This time Mr. Churchill will not succeed in contesting or lying about the veracity of these documents as he tried to do when documents were discovered in Warsaw. These documents bear margin notes inscribed by Messrs. Daladier, Weigand and others which can at any time be affirmed or refused by these very gentlemen. They further produced remarkable evidence of machinations of the warmongers and war extenders.

Above all, they show that these totally hard-hearted politicians regarded all the small nations as means to their ends. . . .

Warned Against Continuing War

These same criminals are responsible for having driven Poland into war.

On October 6, 1939, at this very place, I addressed the German nation for the second time during this war.

I was able to inform them of our glorious military victory over the Polish state. At the same time, I appealed to these men and to the nations themselves. I warned them not to continue this war, the consequences of which could only be devastating. I particularly warned the French of embarking on a war which would forcibly eat its way across the frontier and which irrespective of its outcome would have appalling consequences.

At the same time, I addressed this appeal to the rest of the world, although I feared, as I expressly stated, that the words would not be heard, that it would more than ever arouse the fury of the interested warmongers. Everything happened as I predicted. Responsible elements in France resented any appeal as a dangerous attack on their war profits. . . .

For these proposals of mine, I was abused and personally insulted. . . .

During March, . . . we received information about Anglo-French intentions for intervening in the Russo-Finnish conflict presumably not so much for the sake of helping Finns as in order to damage Russia, which was regarded as a power working with Germany.

These intentions developed into a decision to take an active part if at all possible in the Finnish war in order to obtain a base for carrying the war into the Baltic.

At the same time, however, a proposal of the Allied Supreme War Council, became more and more insistent either to set the Balkans or Asia Minor on fire in order to cut off Germany's supply of oil from Russia, or to obtain possession of the Swedish iron ore. With this object in view, a landing was to have been made in Norway with a main object of occupying the iron railway leading from Narvik across Sweden to the Port of Lulea.

Bravely Defended By Norwegian Units

The conclusion of peace between Russia and Finland caused the contemplated action in the northern states to be withheld at the last moment, but a few days later, these intentions again became more definite and a final decision was reached.

Britain and France had agreed to carry out an immediate occupation of a number of the most important points in Norway on the pretext of preventing Germany from benefiting from further war supplies of Swedish ore. In order to secure this Swedish ore entirely, they intended to march into Sweden and to deal with the small forces which Sweden was in position to assemble, if possible in a friendly way, with force if necessary. . . .

As soon as the danger of the northern states being dragged into the war became apparent, I gave the necessary orders to the German forces. . . .

The Norwegian fjords have become the graveyard of many a British warship. The British fleet was finally obliged to yield before the incessant violent attacks of German dive bombers and evacuated those territories. . . .

Great demands were made on the soldiers already during transport. Air-landing troops provided the first foothold at many places. Division after division followed in a stream and commenced war operations in a territory which provided exceptional facilities for resistance on account of its natural characteristics, and so far as Norwegian units were concerned it was very bravely defended.

As the balance of the British troops landed in Norway, the only remarkable fact worth mentioning was the unscrupulousness, with which troops so poorly equipped and trained and with such inadequate leadership were put ashore as an expeditionary force. They were definitely inferior from the very outset. On the other hand, the achievements of the German infantry, the engineers, of our artillery and other units will go down in history as a proud example of heroism. . . .

Before the campaign in Norway had come to an end, the news from the west became more and more threatening, though actually before the outbreak of war, plans had been made to break through the Maginot Line in the event of an unavoidable conflict with France and Britain, and understanding for which the German troops had been trained and for which they were equipped with the necessary arms. The necessity became evident in the course of the first . . . of some action against Belgium or Holland if need be. Whereas Germany at first had hardly concentrated any forces near the frontiers of Holland and Belgium, apart from the troops necessary for her security, by extending her concentrations notable concentrations of French forces were taking place along the Franco-Belgian frontier.

A massing of practically all attack divisions and mechanized divisions in the sector particularly indicated the intention, in any case the possibility, of their being thrown forward in a lightning dash to Belgium on the German frontier. . . .

Between May the 6th and the 30th fears that the advance of the Allies into Holland and Belgium could be expected at any moment were multiplied, particularly on account of pitiful messages between London and Paris, which have come to our knowledge.

Contradiction To Schlieffen

The following day, on the 8th I therefore gave orders for an immediate attack at 5:35 in the morning, on May 10th. . . .

In contradiction to the Schlieffen plan of 1914, I arranged for the operations to bear mainly on the left wing of the front, where the break-through was to be made, though ostensibly retaining the principles of the opposite plan. This strategy succeeded. . . .

On the 10th of May at 5:35 in the morning, two army commands in the command of Gen. von Umstedt and Gen. von Beck, were ready for the attack. Their allotted task was to force their way through the enemy positions on the frontier and from the whole front to the North Sea to occupy Holland and advance against Antwerp, to take Liege, above all to reach the Meuse with the vast defensive forces of the left wing to carry the crossing of Meuse near Sedan with the main body of the tank and mechanized division as these operations provided to force their way to the sea, closely following the canal and river system of the Aisne and Somme and collecting together all plane and tank and mechanized divisions. . . .

The continuation of the operations in the general directions of the Seine and Aisne were not undertaken in the first place with a view of taking Paris, but in order to obtain or secure suitable points for the commencement of operation; with the object of forcing a way through as far as the Swiss frontier. This enormous offensive operation was carried out according to plan, thanks to the brilliant conduct of all ranks. . . .

Paris fell, a crushing of the enemy resistance on the Aisne cleared the way for breakthrough to the Swiss frontier. . . .

When Marshal Petain made an offer to the effect that France would lay down her arms, he was not relinquishing any forces which still remained intact, but was ending a situation which in the view of every soldier was quite untenable. Only the bloodthirsty dilletantism of Mr. Churchill enabled him either not to comprehend this or deny it against his better knowledge. . .

In this war, the German infantry has once more shown itself to be what it always has been—the best infantry in the world.

The artillery, the engineers, and, above all, the units of our tank and motorized divisions: in this war the German tank corps has won for itself a place in history. The soldiers of the S. S. guards shared this fame. . .

The Air Force in this war was under the command of the Field Marshal. Its duties were to annihilate the enemy air force or to make it impossible for them to carry out flights.

Second, to afford direct and indirect support to the troops in action and indirectly by continuous attacks to destroy the enemy's lines of communication and to weaken and to break the enemy's morale and powers of resistance, then to land parachute troops. . .

I cannot conclude my survey of this struggle without at this point making mention of our ally. Ever since the commencement of the National Socialist regime, two points were prominent in the program of its foreign policy: The achievement of a real understanding and friendship with Italy, and, second, the ahievement of a sane relationship with England. You are aware, gentlemen, that these ideals inspired me 20 years ago to the same extent as they did later. I have expressed and defended these ideas in print and in speeches on innumerable occasions, as long as I was only a member of the opposition in the republic.

Bond of Blood Established

As soon as the German people entrusted me with its leadership, I immediately attempted to realize in practical form this, the oldest of ideals of National Socialist foreign policy. Even today, I still regret that in sipte of all my efforts, I have not succeeded in achieving the friendship with England which, as I believe, would have been a blessing for both peoples. I was not successful in spite of determined and honest efforts. But I am all the more happy that the first point of the program of ideals in my foreign policy could be realized. Thanks for this are due chiefly to the genius who today stands at the head of the Italian people.

It is entirely due to his success, the effects of which will endure for centuries to come. It was possible to establish contact between the two revolutions which rightfully are so nearly related and now finally to establish a bond of blood which is destined to grant Europe new life.

That I personally had the honor to be the friend of this man is a great joy to me in view of his destiny, which has as much in common with mine, and our two revolutions, and moreover the history of the unification and the rise of our two nations . . .

Now, gentlemen, I speak of the future. It is in no spirit of boastful vainglory; that I can confidently leave to others who probably need it more than I, for example Mr. Churchill. I would like without any exaggeration to provide you with a view of the situation as it is and as I see it. In the course of the war, during the last ten months has proved that I was right and that the opinions of our opponents were wrong. When British statesmen declared that their country has always emerged stronger from every defeat and every disaster then it is at least not conceit when I inform you that we shall emerge similarly all the stronger from our successes.

Front From North Cape To Spanish Frontier

As far back as September 3 last year, I told you that come what may, neither force of arms nor time would get Germany down. In military power, the Reich is stronger today than ever before. You have learned of the losses, admittedly heavy for the individual, but slight in their total, which the German army has suffered in action during the last three months. When you consider that during this period we have established a front stretching from the North Cape to the Spanish frontier, you will realize that these losses, especially as compared with those during the great war, are amazingly slight. This is due, apart from the general brilliant standard of the army leaders to the excellent tactical training of the individual soldier and units and the cooperation of the various fighting services.

It is due secondly to the quality and efficiency of our new armaments and thirdly to our deliberate renunciation to show any so-called successes merely for reasons of prestige. I myself have on principle . . . avoided making an attack or carrying out any operations not actually essential in connection with the annihilation of our enemies, nor undertaken merely for the sake of fancied prestige. Nevertheless, we had naturally prepared for very much heavier losses.

German and Russion relations have been finally established. The reason for this is that Britain and France, authorized by certain lesser powers, continually credited Germany with the desire to conquer territory which lay outside the sphere of German interests.

It was said at one time that Germany wanted to possess the Ukraine, again that she intended to invade Finland, yet again that she had threatened Rumania, and finally fears were entertained for the safety of Turkey. In these circumstances, I saw right to enter into straightforward discussions with Russia in order to define clearly once and for all what Germany believes she must regard as the sphere of interests, vital to her future, and which Russia, on the other hand, considered essential for her existence.

This clear definition of their several spheres of interest was followed by a new basis of German-Russian relations. All hope that the completion of this might give rise to fresh tension between Germany and Russia is futile.

I have no desire to dwell on the sufferings brought on the soldiers in this war. . . .

Neither in this world nor in the next can Messrs. Churchill and Reynaud answer for the suffering they have caused by their counsels and decrees to millions of people.

From Britain I now hear only a single cry, the cry not of the people but of the politicians, that the war must go on. . . .

Believe me, gentlemen, I feel a deep disgust for this type of unscrupulous politicians who wrecks whole nations and states. It almost causes me pain to think that I should have been selected by fate to deal the final blow to the structure which these men have already set tottering. It never has been my intention to wage wars, but rather to build up a state with a new social order and the finest possible standard of culture. . . .

Answer to Bring Unending Suffering

Only a few days ago Mr. Churchill reiterated his declaration that he wants war. Some six weeks ago, he began to wage war in a field where he apparently considers himself particularly strong, namely, air raids on the civil population, although under the pretense the raids are directed against so-called military objectives. Since the bombardment of Friborg, thees objectives are open towns, market places and villages, burning houses, hospitals, schools, kindergartens and whatever else may come their way, I have thus far hardly answered this bombardment. That does not mean this will be or is my only reply. I know full well that our answer which will come one day will bring upon the people unending suffering and misery. Of course, not upon Mr. Churchill, for he no doubt will already be in Canada where the money and the children of those principally interested in the war have already been sent.

For millions of other people, however, great suffering will begin. Mr. Churchill or perhaps others for once believe me when I prophesy a great empire will be destroyed, an empire it was never my intention to destroy or even to harm.

I do, however, realize that this struggle, if it continues, can end only with the complete annihilation of one or the other of the two adversaries. Mr. Churchill may believe this will be Germany; I know that it will be Britain.

In this hour, I feel it to be my duty before my own conscience to appeal once more to reason and common sense in Great Britain as much as elsewhere. I consider myself in a position to make this appeal, since I am not the vanquished, begging favors of the victor speaking in the name of reason. I can see no reason why this war must go on. I am grieved to think of the sacrifices which it will claim.

LOST SHIP—The British admiralty announced yesterday that the Italian cruiser Bartolomeo Colleoni had been sunk in the Mediterranean by the cruiser Sydney, of the Australian navy. This is the first Italian cruiser reported lost in this war could make out four big and two small British ships.

"There were great gun flashes and thunderous explosions, but we were too far away to see what happened to either the British or Italian ships."

The 5,069-ton Bartolomeo Colleoni carried eight 6-inch guns, six 3.9-inchers and 16 antiaircraft guns. She also was equipped for mine laying and carried two planes.

The Australian Sydney, 6,800 tons, is the namesake of the ship which finally caught the famous German commerce raider, Emden, and sank her off the Cocos Islands, in the Indian Ocean, in the World War.

Britain, U. S. Map Postwar Economic Plan

Treasury Officials Prepare to Cushion The Shock of Peace

Great Britain and the United States have discussed blueprints for a postwar world that would be free of the present straitjacket controls on money and credits, Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., disclosed yesterday.

The new economic horizons were painted in secret conversations between Morgenthau and Sir Frederick Phillips, undersecretary of the British treasury, who is returning home. The talks lasted all week, with President Roosevelt participating at one point.

Frozen Assets Discussed

A Treasury announcement stated that the conversations covered problems of foreign exchange, the effect of British war buying on the balance of payments, and the disposition of the $2,000,000,000 in frozen assets here of invaded European countries.

Outcome of the secret talks, disclosed by the Morgenthau announcement and by Sir Frederick in talking with reporters on leaving the Treasury yesterday, was:

1. Reaffirmation of the principle of freedom of trade and exchange laid down in the tripartite monetary agreement of 1936. In this connection, Sir Frederick assured Secretary Morgenthau that Great Britain would "return to liberal monetary and trade policies as soon as possible after hostilities cease."

2. Implied American approval of British sterling controls which, the statement said, "should tend toward stabilizing the sterling rate and help protect the American market." Sir Frederick explained that the registered sterling account, the control device being used, would cushion the American market against competition from devaluated British currency.

3. British insistence, voiced by Sir Frederick, that funds of German-invaded countries, especially the more than $1,000,000,000 of French funds, "frozen" here by the United States, should not fall into German hands.

Must Be Kept From Nazis

"We don't want these assets to get into the effective control of Germany," Sir Frederick said.

4. An understanding between Britain and the United States on the effect that huge British war purchases here might have in dislocating the balance of payments between the two countries. The British have bought more than $1,000,000,000 worth of war goods here already and have plans to buy another billion, which would far outbalance reduced American imports from Britain.

The problem of retaining gold as a standard of currency after the war was covered as an incidental to the other conversations, with the understanding being that both nations favored continued use of the metal.

British Decline To Discuss Peace

plore possibilities for a permanent settlement.)

Though Hitler is well aware of this consistent Churchill stand, and doubtless knew in advance what sort of reception his peace scheme would get, the British had been expecting him to make just such a gesture ever since the fall of France and the determined British actions which kept him from laying hands of the French fleet.

The general opinion was that the only surprising thing about it was the lack of anything concrete or even novel.

Of Hitler's threat to destroy the British Empire, the ordinary Britain scoffed. "Let him try it."

There were many to recall that this is the 352nd anniversary of the Spanish armada's arrival off Britain, and that the only Spaniards to land then were prisoners of the British navy.

Tired of speculating on when the German attack will come, the British did not even try to guess whether the Hitler speech presaged an immediate attempt at invasion.

At the same time the British navy was confronted with the threat of a fresh German sea raider "at large in the Atlantic" when it was announced that two British merchant ships had been sunk near the West Indies.

British aircraft, meanwhile, made repeated daylight attacks on barge concentrations—apparently being prepared for attack on Britain—near Rotterdam and Boulogne.

Other targets, the air ministry said, included warehouses at Le Havre, the airdrome at St. Omer, near Boulogne, the Nazi naval base at Emden and supply depots, aircraft factories, oil storage tanks, munitions factories and trains, railroad yards and airdromes at scattered places in Germany.

Krupp Works Hit

The air ministry said part of the Krupp Armament Works at Essen was hit by bombs and that a big explosion "made evident the success of the attack."

The Focke-Wulf aircraft factory at Bremen also was bombed, the ministry reported.

A British pilot descended to 3,500 feet to drop incendiary bombs on two supply trains south of Soltau, and resulting explosions continued for a quarter hour.

Bombs straddled the quays at the Emden fuel depot, starting a fire which could be seen 40 miles out to sea, and Bremen and Hamburg oil refineries also were hit, the announcement said.

Coast Network Cuts Off Hitler's 'Defense of Crimes'

Los Angeles, July 19 (AP).—Broadcast of Adolf Hitler's address to the Reichstag today was cut off the 31 Pacific Coast stations of the Mutual-Don Lee network after part had been received.

The following announcement was read from Station KHJ:

"The management of this network is of the opinion that it is not in the public interest nor in harmony with the attitude of this Government to permit the continuation of his broadcast by Mr. Hitler from Germany.

"We feel sure that our American listeners will concur in our opinion that Mr. Hitler should not be permitted to use our American facilities to justify his crimes against civilization itself."

'City of Flint' Skipper Will Go Under Knife

Chicago, July 19 (INS).—Capt. Joseph A. Gainard, commander of the S. S. City of Flint when it was seized by the Nazis early in the war, will undergo a minor operation in an Eastern naval hospital, he said tonight in Chicago.

Capt. Gainard reached Chicago after completing a Maritime Commission assignment in fitting out ships in New Orleans.

Britain Is Offered Peace Or Destruction to Britain

answer comes it will be terrible for millions of people.

"Churchill should for once believe me; a great world empire then will be destroyed. And this war will not be ended before one of the two combatants is down and out. Churchill may think it will be we who will be down and out.

"But I will make a prophecy, just by way of exception: I know that destruction of England will be the end of further struggle . . . My conscience compels me to appeal once more to England's commonsense. I am not doing that as a defeated man, but as a victor."

Briefly touching on Russo-German relations, Hitler declared these had been "fixed once and for all by a clear delimitation of spheres of interests," and that British efforts to lure Moscow into an anti-German front were not only futile but foolish.

Italy, the Fuehrer said, had entered the war entirely of her accord without any pressure from Germany.

This action, however, had helped to make the French realize more speedily the hopelessness of further resistance. And, once Italy was in the war, Italo-German military and political cooperation was complete, "and the end of it all will be a joint victory."

Arriving today from Rome, Count Galeazzo Ciano, Italian foreign minister and son-in-law of Premier Mussolini, occupied a place of honor in the front row of the diplomatic corps box.

All the bloodshed of the past ten months could have been avoided, Hitler said, for it was not Germany who wanted war. The great aim of the Nazi movement, he explained, was simply to "strike off the shackles of Versailles," and it would have been possible to achieve this aim peacefully.

His prewar policy in pursuit of this aim, he said, was twofold: "Real friendship with Italy and a similar relationship with England."

At Munich, in September, 1938, it even seemed as though this peaceful revision actually would be realized, he told his uniformed audience.

Poland "Pushed Into War"

It was a time when, "thanks to growing common sense, it appeared as though international cooperation might lead to peaceful solution of the remaining problems. But the agreement to this end, signed in Munich on September 29, 1938, by the four leading interested states, was not only not welcomed in London and Paris but was actually condemned as a sign of abominable weakness."

The Munich agreement was condemned and sabotaged, he went on, because peaceful revision threatened to upset the plans of "Jewish capitalist war-mongers . . . Free Masons, armament manufacturers and war profiteers, international businessmen, stock exchange jugglers."

And so it came about that Poland was "pushed into war" and the peace offer Germany made after conclusion of the Polish campaign denounced as "cowardly."

In the subsequent Norwegian campaign, which he explained was necessary because of an Allied attempt to hit at Germany through Scandinavia, German soldiers met "very brave" resistance from Norwegian troops. But the British there, he continued, were poorly trained, badly equipped and "definitely inferior in every respect."

Turning to the great westward push through Holland, Belgium and France, Hitler disclosed that the capture of Paris was not in the original plan of campaign, but after Paris was taken, encirclement tactics made possible the crushing of organized French military resistance and left Marshal Henri Petain no choice but to sue for peace.

In asserting there was "no real ground for prolongation of the war," Hitler confessed he felt only "disgust" at the prospect of a fight to the finish.

But "from Britain I now hear only a single cry—not from the people but from the politicians—that the war must go on."

"In neither this world nor the next," he exclaimed bitterly, "can Churchill and Reynaud (former French Premier) answer for the suffering they have brought upon their peoples."

Hitler said German losses, "from the polar regions to the Spanish border," were extraordinarily small.

"We are prepared for much greater losses," said Hitler. The men saved now are available to carry on the fight for freedom.

"War materials are being produced in such quantities that in some departments it actually is necessary to slow down manufacture because of a lack of storage facilities . . .

"Thanks to the four-year plan, Germany is prepared to assume the heaviest burdens. . . . We possess today the two most important raw materials—coal and iron—in, I dare say, unlimited quantities."

Reviewing the latest revelations in the German White Book, Hitler said that "Churchill will not be able to lie away" messages allegedly exchanged by French Generalissimo Maxim Weygand, former French Premier Daladier and others in connection with the alleged planned northern campaign of the Allies.

Throughout Hitler's speech ran a high not of personal praise for the armed forces and the German people: capped by the announcement that Field Marshall Hermann Wilhelm Goering has been elevated to the position of Reich's marshal of greater Germany and, in addition, may now wear the grand cross of the Iron Cross.

Britain Shifts Army Chiefs

By the United Press

London, July 19.—Great Britain tonight contemptuously answered Adolf Hitler's "appeal to reason" with a fresh challenge by naming a new commander in chief for more than 1,500,000 troops braced for the blow of Germany's threatened invasion.

The new commander in chief of Britain's home forces, entrenched along hundreds of miles of barricaded coasts, is 57-year-old Lieut. Gen. Sir Alan Francis Brooke, who recently has been in charge of a British southern command.

Nicknamed "the Wizard" because of his all-around knowledge of gunnery and mechanized warfare, Brooke replaces Gen. Sir Edmund Ironside, who surrenders the post after serving as chief of the imperial general staff and, since May 26, commander in chief of the armed forces.

Now, with Hitler's full-sense aerial and sea assault on the British Isles perhaps only hours away, Brooke will bear the bulk of the heavy responsibility of turning away the first attempted invasion of England in nearly 900 years.

Hitler's scathing condemnation of the British government scarcely had died from the air waves before the Churchill government announced the appointment of Brooke, replacing the leathery Ironside, who now will be divested of any specific command and will serve only in an advisory role.

Ironside was promoted to the rank of field marshal in recognition of his services and Viscount Gort, commander of the British Expeditionary Force after its withdrawal from the European continent, was named inspector general for the British soldiers in training.

The role of Gort, once Britain's most dynamic military figure, will be an important one because he must supervise the training of recruits who, under the new speed-up, are being registered at the rate of 1,200,000 men a month and are being placed under arms as fast as training facilities permit.

Brooke was named to replace Ironside, it was understood, because the Churchill government believes, a man with immediate experience of command in France and Belgium is needed to take the measure necessary for coping with Germany's "blitz" type of war.

Hitler's Offer

There were, as Hitler said yesterday, some who regarded his Reichstag speech of October 6, following the conquest of Poland, as a sign of German weakness. There are not many who will make the same mistake about the Fuehrer's latest report to his people.

When Hitler told the Reichstag yesterday that he had convened that body "with the intention of appealing once more and for the last time to common sense in general" he undoubtedly meant precisely what he said. If no honorable way can be found to open peace negotiations now the near future will without question see the unleashing of a furious German attack on England. And it may be expected to have an energy and ferocity equalled only by the heroism with which it will be resisted.

It is, of course, for the British government to decide whether or not it will accept or spurn the opening for a negotiated peace which Hitler indicates. But it must be said that the offer does not seem to be couched in an unreasonable form. It does not suggest British capitulation but apparently only a discussion of terms which Germany is prepared to propose.

It is not for people living sheltered lives, thousands of miles from the horror of this war, to advise Mr. Churchill as to his course. But it is difficult to see why he should not at least ascertain, and then if desirable make public to the world, the precise nature of the peace which Germany would accept.

Otherwise the prospect is for destruction far more ghastly than anything yet seen; for destruction in which the bravery and tenacity of the British will at best be able to carry to Germany and the German people a measure of the same sort of annihilation which is being prepared for the once smiling countryside and the teeming cities of England.

It is unbelievably tragic that, at this fateful moment, there seems to be no neutral statesmanship competent to assist in ascertaining whether a mutually satisfactory settlement between English courage and German determination can be arranged. Certainly it is not beyond imagination to picture such an outcome with honor to both principals and at least some promise of a lasting peace for blundering mankind.

Other adjectives might be used, but none will call Hitler weak for the speech he made yesterday. And none with any moral courage would call the British weak if, before darkness falls irrevocably over western Europe, they stop to discover whether a way out, or merely a blind alley, has been suggested.

Mr. Wallace Must Resign

President Roosevelt's running mate, Henry A. Wallace, heads a department that disburses huge sums in the form of loans and subsidies to farmers.

During the current fiscal year the Department of Agriculture will pay out about $500,000,000 in benefit payments under the soil conservation program and over $200,000,000 in so-called farm parity payments. It may lend money to farmers to stabilize prices of farm products and it may spend $235,000,000 for the removal of surplus commodities, most of it for the purpose of distributing foodstuffs to families on relief.

The department is also authorized to lend large sums for rural electrification, for rehabilitation of farm families, and for financing purchases of farm lands by tenant farmers. All in all, including RFC advances, the department's direct outlays this fiscal year will come close to $1,500,000,000.

These direct outlays, moreover, are a very inadequate measure of the scope of the departmental spending-lending activities. For under an executive reorganization order the formerly independent Farm Credit Administration has become a subordinate unit of the Department of Agriculture. That brings under the Secretary's control the Federal Land Bank system, which makes long-term loans to farmers, as well as the agencies which make intermediate and short-term loans to farmers and the Banks for Cooperatives, all of which are in possession of capital funds with which to carry on their operations.

Thus it will be seen that the Department of Agriculture controls a vast complex of lending agencies. Some, like the Federal Land Banks, have been managed on sound business principles; others have been operated chiefly as relief agencies granting subsidies disguised as loans. Some have been incorporated and provided with their own capital, so that they can function without the aid of appropriations. Others depend upon recurrent Congressional appropriations to keep going.

The transfer of the Farm Credit Administration to the Department of Agriculture has been sharply attacked by experts as a dangerous proceeding likely to impair efforts to maintain sound credit policies. This follows from the fact that the head of the department, as a political appointee of the President, is inevitably subject to political pressures from which independent managements are relatively free.

If the present arrangement seems undesirable, there can be no questioning the impropriety of retaining Secretary Wallace in his present office while he is running for Vice President.

If the head of the WPA were to become a candidate for high political office, the public would certainly demand his resignation in order to make sure that the relief system would not be used to gain votes for those in control. Yet the resources at the disposal of the head of the Department of Agriculture would afford a much larger campaign chest for influencing the votes of the farm population.

Mr. Wallace is a man of the highest personal integrity. But no matter how scrupulously he might try to avoid use of his great discretionary powers to further his political ambitions, he cannot successfully combine the roles of office-holder and office-seeker. For his own sake, as well as for the good of the public service, he must promptly tender his resignation as Secretary of Agriculture.

The President Accepts

The speech by which Franklin D. Roosevelt made himself the first third-term nominee in American history was a very notable oratorical achievement. It was a convincing, and undoubtedly sincere, presentation of motives and reasons which have persuaded the President to shatter a national tradition. Criticism of that action by itself will not be very convincing. Much that is more precious than tradition is being shattered nowadays.

That which arouses more doubt and anxiety is the Messianic complex which seems to be possessing Mr. Roosevelt ever more firmly. There is no question of the sincerity, but there is real room for doubting the good judgment, of any man who believes, and indeed virtually says, that he is indispensable to the national welfare. The tragedy of such an attitude in a democratic society is that those who feel this way thereby reveal an underlying skepticism as to the value of democracy as a way of life.

This underlying skepticism as to democracy was unconsciously indicated in several passages of Mr. Roosevelt's ringing acceptance address. It was first noted at the very outset, when he referred to "self-appointed commentators and interpreters who will seek to misinterpret or question (my) motives." The emphasis placed on the adjective "self-appointed" was significant. It intimated a strong sympathy for a society in which all commentators are appointed by the chief of state himself, or by a reliable propaganda minister.

That little indication was but a straw, albeit one of those which shows the direction of the wind. More significant was the reference to the possibility of the Government passing to "untried" and "inexperienced" hands next January. To Mr. Roosevelt all hands except his own are coming to be viewed as "inexperienced," if not incompetent. And that again is not an attitude which betokens faith in the essential characteristics of democracy.

More startling than this, however, was the President's statement that if "untried hands" take over in January, "we can merely hope and pray that they will not substitute appeasement and compromise with those who seek to destroy all democracies everywhere."

It is not easy to estimate precisely what Mr. Roosevelt means by this. But the remark is certainly not in harmony with the part of the Democratic platform which says that: "We will not participate in foreign wars, and we will not send our Army, naval or air forces to fight in foreign lands outside of the Americas, except in case of attack."

That assurance, more categorical than anything said on the same subject in the Republican platform, was definitely a form of appeasement. It told Hitler that, no matter what the outcome of the war in Europe, he need not, if careful, fear American participation.

It seems to follow that Mr. Roosevelt's anxiety about any possible Republican "appeasement" must either be somewhat insincere, or else his own intention, if reelected, is promptly to forget his party's stand on noninvolvement.

The latter is the conclusion which many are likely to adopt. For there is no basis in experience for believing that the President, if reelected, will take the platform of the Chicago convention seriously. As he blotted out the other aspirants; as he steam-rollered the obvious antagonism to the selection of Secretary Wallace as his running mate, so he may be expected, if reelected, to forget this Democratic platform as he forgot that of 1932, in favor of his own personal view of what constitutes the national welfare.

To that effect he has openly and honestly served warning. And around that warning, rather than on the mere fact of his third-term candidacy, opposition will be likely to crystallize. This rising ground swell of opposition is by no means purely partisan. It is shared by all the steadily increasing number of those to whom Mr. Roosevelt's inner faith in the fundamentals of democracy has become suspect.

The Timmons Boom

The name of Mr. Bascom Timmons, of Texas and Washington, D. C., as a possible nominee for the Vice Presidency, was introduced into the Democratic National Convention for much the same reason that the porter scene was introduced into Macbeth—because the rest of the business was getting too painful to be endured without respite.

The same psychology, no doubt, was responsible for the tumults of grateful applause which punctuated the speech by Mr. Francis W. Durbin, of Ohio, after he had fought and argued his way into and out of the arms of Mayor Kelly's cops and up to the platform. Although far too few of the delegates had ever heard of Mr. Timmons, this increased rather than dampened their enthusiasm when Mr. Durbin mentioned it. They had been hearing the name of the foreordained candidate a little too often.

As it happened Mr. Timmons was present in his capacity of political correspondent, and thus was able to acknowledge with a bow the demonstration on his behalf. And after so much wretched oratory and rubber-stamp rhetoric, his formal statement to the convention had a pure and classical eloquence. "If I am nominated," he said, "please forget to notify me."

The Timmons boom for the Vice Presidency had, of course, begun merely as a bit of whimsy among some of his colleagues. But Mr. Durbin, although he put two others into nomination as well, seems to have taken it quite seriously. And somebody in the Wisconsin delegation took it seriously enough to give Mr. Timmons his vote.

It is in many ways a great pity that it went no farther than that. Many of us here in Washington, who know Mr. Timmons and admire him profoundly, were genuinely hoping that the revolt against Secretary Wallace might even reach the proportions of a Timmons stampede.

That Mr. Timmons would relish the idea of being Vice President we greatly doubt. But we have not the least doubt that he would fill the office admirably. Certainly as a nominee he would have lifted the approaching campaign to a higher level of intelligence, humor and common sense than it now seems likely to attain.

Vox Populi

Fellow Americans, we give you the man of the hour, the hero of the 1940 Democratic National Convention, the fellow who saved it from dropping dead of acute ennui. His name is Thomas D. Garry. It is likely that you never heard of him before and just as likely that you never will again. But he has had his moment of glory.

Mr. Garry is a bricklayer by profession and superintendent of sewers for the City of Chicago by grace of the Kelly-Nash machine. And he has proved himself one of those men who, when leaders falter, can dash from obscurity to wrest triumph from the jaws of crisis.

The delegates at Chicago understood very well that they were expected to stampede for the third term and had been patiently awaiting the proper signal. But when at last the moment came, when Senator Barkley had uttered the sacred syllables of "Roo-se-velt" their brains were so befogged by the toxemias of odious oratory that they could not quickly work themselves into a first-class bedlam. They sat numb in their seats or stood stupidly in the aisles and there was at first rather less uproar and hysteria than you would hear at a chess tournament or a Ladies' Aid Society supper. In short the whole thing was within a trice of becoming a most woeful flop.

Then it was that Mr. Garry produced the one-man demonstration which, as far as the radio listeners were concerned, sounded much more impressive than the real thing would have done and which finally shamed the exhausted delegates into stampeding anyhow.

Mr. Garry was one of the few persons present who knew that the stadium had another loudspeaker system besides the one in use by the convention, and besides Mr. Garry is an ancient chum of Mr. Callahan, the stadium electrician. Thus it was no trouble at all to find the switch that controlled the secondary amplifying system.

Presently those on the floor and in the galleries were electrified by a mighty and mysterious voice, bellowing "Roosevelt, Roosevelt; Give Us Roosevelt," so loud, and with such subtle variations on the theme, that it began to seem like the Voice of the People, which is traditionally identical with the voice of heaven. As a matter of sordid fact, the Voice was coming from the opposite direction, as Mr. Garry was at a microphone far in the bowels of the basement.

We are glad to report that Mr. Garry's resourcefulness is fully matched by his modesty. He did, he said afterward, no more than his simple duty. The Boss (Mr. Pat Nash) wanted a Roosevelt stampede. And he got one.

Military Roads

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The article dealing with military roads, in The Post of July 14, was misleading.

Hitler's famous roads—called the Reichsautobahn—are a 5,000-mile system of toll roads. They were planned by the Social Democratic administration in Germany prior to 1933, were based almost wholly on American road building experience and ideas, and have since been executed by Dr. Todt, an engineer with wide American experience. Since construction was begun, at the time Hitler became dictator, less than one-third of the proposed system has been completed. Due to the need for concrete, steel and labor in military work, construction has only dribbled along since 1937. The military importance of the Autobahn has from its inception been a matter of considerable question.

American highways are admirably suited to its defense needs. For the last 20 years there has been the closest cooperation between military and highway authorities. Our Army equipment has been built to operate on our highway system, and the widths, loadings, bridges and other standards of our road construction have been established with a view to their military usefulness. It is a fact that the heaviest commercial trucks now using the highways demand more than any military vehicle. With the exception of a few thousand substandard bridges and some connecting roads at points of military concentration, the system as a whole leaves very little to be desired. Anyone who doubts the fact can look up the latest critical survey in the January issue of Engineering News Record. Far from the Army recommending "80,000 miles of superhighways" as your article states, this network of strategic roads is today virtually complete.

In conclusion, it is a delightful fact that the most spectacular progress of the German mechanized army has been made over the notoriously poor Polish roads, and the scarcely better French highways. I suspect that very little military value has been gained from the very costly work on the Autobahn itself. At a time when we are a little dazzled by Nazi victories, it is good to remember some of its boners. And when we are wallowing in self-recriminations because some parts of our defenses have been neglected, we ought to remember the credit side for democracy as well.

Our Leaders

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As I heard the woman delegate and speaker in the convention, on the radio, particularizing the importance of what is known as "social and economic injustice," as major problems, I feel about it as I do about the current effort for peace, that is, aiming at peace, while disregarding the need of international understanding about seemingly nonessential, but actual contributory factors perpetuating mutual distrust and secret antagonisms. Let us state the problem more accurately by first understanding that there is no such thing as deliberately planned and executed social and economic injustice—at least not with the conscious consent of government. What seems injustice, in other words, the lack of equal opportunity for all, in fact, as should be, is a negative phenomenon, the result of "not knowing how" on the part of expected leaders, to so regulate trade and industry, labor and finance (or whatever other factors may enter into the calculus) as to assure universal employment. As I said, the conditions complained against are not brought about by any deliberate (ignorant or malicious) plan, but rather, by the absence of a more intelligent (adequately intelligent) planning in advance; by anticipation of future changes. In other words, if the Nation had produced the right kind of leaders 50 years ago, who would believe and dare to do what others would consider foolish or impossible, we would have had no unemployment, consequently less seemingly unjust distribution of the good things of life. But perhaps we may have to change our concept as to what constitutes a "leader." Perhaps this subject should have been taken up in universities as "science of the principles of government." In fact that may be the need of all nations, since they all can stand a little more improvement, and the effort would be more worthy than the study of old bones, or pigs or mice, for which so much time and money is being wasted. The salvation of the masses and of mankind depends on the kind of leadership that is ahead of the popular intelligence by at least 50 years.

The Democratic Convention

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Like thousands of other people last night, I listened to Keynoter Barkley's speech in order not to miss the President's statement on his third term intentions. And like thousands of other people, I found the statement—when, at long last, it came—an anticlimax and a subterfuge. The statement that he was not personally campaigning for the nomination but would accept it was a fact which the majority of the delegates and of the American people already knew. Nothing could have been flatter. The statement that the President had in no way, "exerted any influence in the selection of delegates or upon the opinion of delegates to this convention" was an obvious misstatement of fact. In permitting his closest political associates, Hopkins, Ickes and Wallace, to campaign for him, the President was exerting a deliberate influence upon the selection of delegates and upon their opinions. The statement was the insipid culmination of months of shadow-boxing.

As for Senator Barkley's keynote address—it was distinguished for length, partisan recrimination, inaccuracy and dullness. The good Senator doesn't seem to know that this is 1940, not 1932, and that Herbert Hoover is not the Republican candidate for President. A large part of the speech was devoted to a diatribe against Hoover and his administration. What a tragedy that the keynote address of one of our two political parties in the greatest crisis the world has ever faced should be chiefly concerned with smearing a man and an administration that went out of office eight years ago!

INDEPENDENT VOTER.

Washington, July 17.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: An item in the papers today says a barroom at the Madison street entrance to the stadium sold 15 barrels of beer and 165 quarts of whisky during the first day's session of the convention. "The manager said there was a brisk business in half-pint packages for seat drinking purposes."

One can readily sympathize with the doubtless imperative necessity of the delegates to fortify themselves with strong drink to stomach and go through with the dark and dirty deed of betrayal of the American people they have been forced to perpetrate by their lord and master.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: My, my! How red Mr. Hoover's face must be today!

There are times when one wonders why the Lord does not reach down and lift the Democratic Party bodily to its heavenly mansion, where it will be free from this tainted Republican world.

My, my! ELEPHANT.

Of Freedom

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What is a Christian democracy? I have been taught that the United States is the living example of a Christian democracy. I am thankful to be a citizen of such a country. Let us pray that our country may become more Christian and more democratic.

We deplore the conditions our friends in Europe and Asia are forced to endure. We are told that the cause of these sufferings is the growth of the totalitarian form of government. Therefore, we don't want a totalitarian form of government here, no matter what fancy name it may have.

Last fall we were told that our country could furnish instruments for wholesale destruction of humans like ourselves in Europe and Asia, without getting hurt. It is time "we the people" of the United States begin to take a healthy look before we swallow much more such self-evident lies, if we wish to keep even the name democracy.

We are told that we need not worry about food, for the Government is taking care of that through the ever-normal granary. Millions of our folks are taken care of by our Government projects. Our unemployed youth are taken care of by the CCC and by the attractive invitations to join the Army, Navy, aviation, or other like Governmental agencies. Our money problem is being taken care of by Governmental appropriations of millions every few days for materials to destroy human life. Things 90 per cent of us don't want to use. Our industries don't need to be concerned, for they will keep going as they do in Europe, for we have the Industrial Mobilization Act ready to take care of that. Employment for all, is almost solved.

When the compulsory military training bill is passed, we can all do our part as "nuts" in the military machine. The freedom of speech ought not be hard to take care of by a Government so efficient that it can take men from their homes, occupations, money and religion, and force them to learn the art of human destruction. This seems more miraculous when one thinks that millions of these very men, or their fathers, left other countries in the past years to get away from compulsory military training. They wanted to be a part of our great democracy. The land that promises freedom, freedom of speech, freedom of work, freedom of religion, freedom to do anything constructive. Instead, it seems these great principles of equality and liberty are being hid by the rush to give power to selfish organized movements of destruction. If I read the papers and listen to the radio rightly, it seems we are making of our democracy what we condemn in the totalitarian countries. Does it seem that way to you?

C. G. PRISER.

Equal Rights

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Just what in heaven's name do these women want when they speak of equality with man? Do they really know themselves? Or are they merely trying to muddle up the economic system of an already muddled-up world?

Mrs. Roosevelt claims that it would be unwise for them to place an amendment in the Constitution at this time as it might impair their rights in labor without legislation to offset same.

What they really want, I think, is full equality handed them on a silver platter, garnished with milk and honey. In other words, they want equality as long as things are running smoothly, reserving the right to fly back to the cloak of womanhood when hard times set in.

If there are any good red-blooded men left in the United States I'd advise them to start a "back to the home" movement for women, and put them in their place and keep them there.

Admiral's Buzzar

On exclusive upper Sixteenth street recently I saw the children rigging up a lemonade booth to get some pennies for the Red Cross, and instantly I was back in my own childhood, sitting on the parade ground in the Navy Yard and surrounded by some terribly anemic-looking pincushions.

It was during World War I, and the three little girls in the Navy Yard burned to do something for the war orphans of Europe.

So one hot morning we decided to hold that afternoon what we fondly called a Buzzar. It was a grand-sounding word and we rolled it off at every opportunity, though not one of us had anything but the foggiest notion of what a bazaar really was, except that you made things and sold them.

Refreshments we must certainly have. But what? Something told us that our favorite hot-weather drink, our very own invention, compounded of cold water and wintergreen tooth powder, would not be a best-seller among the grown-ups.

ᔓᔕ

However, there was always lemonade, less exhilarating but safer, and a survey of our respective pantries showed that we did have a few lemons on hand. So we agreed that lemonade it would be.

Then we got our sewing baskets, shook the dust off them, and sat out under the trees on the parade ground and sewed furiously.

But at the end of a morning of hard labor I had produced only a flurry of limp pincushions and my colleagues had achieved only one flat and emaciated pot-holder and a bevy of what looked like dispirited sausages, but were really sachets, heavily scented with talcum. Even we, looking at our handiwork through the eyes of love, felt a bit depressed.

"Oh, well, we can always get flowers out of our gardens and sell them back to our mothers," said Caroline consolingly.

We agreed that this would help, but still we felt depressed.

ᔓᔕ

Then the Admiral came walking by, and we felt better immediately, for everyone in the yard loved him.

"What are you children up to?" he asked, smiling.

"We're going to hold a Buzzar for the children of Europe," we told him, showing him what we had made.

"Fine work," he said, and it was surprising how much better our things appeared after he had sniffed the sachets appreciatively and commented on the great usefulness of pincushions and pot-holders.

He asked us a number of questions before strolling on. And a few minutes later things began to happen!

Out on the parade ground rose a tent of circus-like dimensions.

And a bit later, as we were having our lunches, an orderly came to our different homes to announce that the Admiral sent his compliments, and was having the tent set up to house the Bazaar. Also, the Navy Band would arrive at 3 o'clock to play for the Bazaar. Also, the Admiral would have a notice sent around informing the entire yard of the time and place of the event.

Clicking his heels, the orderly departed, leaving joy in the hearts of the children and consternation among our mothers.

ᔓᔕ

"You mean you're having a bazaar this afternoon?" asked my mother; and giving one look at my pincushions she dashed to the phone and called the other mothers to council. Hastily they went into a huddle, and down from attics and out of chests came hoarded bridge prizes and unused Christmas gifts to supplement our needlework.

The gardens were stripped of all their flowers to make huge bouquets, and up from the beautiful gardens of the Admiral came basket after basket for us.

Inside the big tent we set up card tables and arranged our wares upon them. And we were still arranging when we spotted the white uniforms of the band through the trees.

The band struck up a tune, and like Pied Pipers of Hamelin seemed to summon people to the parade ground in swarms. Everyone from the Admiral's Lady to Judy O'Grady was there.

ᔓᔕ

And they were all thirsty! They all wanted lemonade.

We had to send out an S. O. S. for more and more lemons. And as the strains of the band floated through the kitchen windows we toiled mightily over those lemons. I remember our hands got so sore that we took off our shoes and socks and rolled lemons with our feet to soften the fruit for squeezing. Frequently a lemon would burst and after a time the kitchen floor began to look like an inland sea.

We carried pails and pails of lemonade to the tent, and then rushed back to squeeze more lemons. We had no modern electrical devices, only the old-fashioned "hand-squeezer" and that is exactly what it was.

We worked harder than we had ever worked before, and loved it. And when the Bazaar was over, instead of the pennies we had expected, we found that we had about $25 for the children of Europe.

Miracle Worker

Chicago, July 19.

WHILE THE DEMOCRATS have been mocking the spirit of democracy under the social auspices of the politico-underworld local branch of the party of humanity, a miracle-worker has been surveying the proceedings with a cold and knowing eye. We have had in our midst here this week Sam Houston Jones, the man who beat Huey Long's brother, Earl, for the Governorship of Louisiana and whose first Legislature has just repealed most of the late Huey's dictatorial laws.

The notorious Louisiana highway police have been reorganized and deprived of the powers by which Huey converted them into a State O. G. P. U. The kidnaping, or Cossack, law, which permitted this band of thugs to arrest a citizen and hold him in a jail far from his home for an indefinite term, beyond the power of any court, has been repealed, along with Huey's law whereby the Kingfish could buy votes at the rate of $5 each, sufficient to beat the opposition in any doubtful precinct, and charge the cost to his political opponents.

Huey's National Guard law, pushed through one of the many special sessions of the gang of menials which served as a Legislature, also has been wiped off the books, and the State troops now may be called out only in the presence of a legitimate emergency. Huey's law permitted him to call up the soldiers at will, although he was not a State officer but a United States Senator, merely by ordering his Governor to sound the alarm.

HE THUS HAD a standing army to serve his political purposes with equipment furnished by the United States Government. He called out the soldiers on one occasion to intimidate his political opposition at the State Capitol in Baton Rouge and mounted a machine gun in front of a local hotel.

Another time Huey ordered his adjutant general to proceed with a force of men to the office of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, the paper which eventually destroyed the surviving power of his crooked and ruthless dictatorship, seize the plant and install an officer as editor because he was displeased with an editorial. Huey was drunk at the time, and some of his subordinates shut him in the bathroom of his hotel quarters, doused his head in cold water and talked him out of his intention.

The law which permitted him to call the soldiers into service for the suppression of American liberties, including their own, of course, was probably the most dangerous of all innovations, and it may be noted that at no time during Huey's reign or after did any of the bleeding heart New Dealers, who were so sensitive about the civil liberties of the C. I. O. Communists in Jersey City, express any interest in the civil liberties of the Louisiana people.

UNDER GOV. JONES' urging, although he had only a minority of the lower house of the Legislature, about 70 of the dictatorial laws have been repealed and, of almost equal importance, 176 State commissions and boards, which Huey established to provide thousands of mock or nominal jobs for members of his gang, have been consolidated into 20 or abolished. The Governor reports that the survivors of the gang in the Legislature have surrendered, so to speak, to a new public opinion in the State, and that even Huey's crooked judges and State legal officers have shown a tendency to turn square.

The reorganization and reform of the courts and the prosecuting machinery give hope that in time it will be possible to carry out successful prosecutions in the State courts of thieves who robbed the State of millions of dollars in oil rights and royalties, and to recover the stealings of these and other criminals of many varieties who prospered under Huey and Dick Leche, the convict former Governor.

Rufus Fontenot, the Federal collector of internal revenue, was induced to resign and accept a parallel office in the State government, to which he will bring the intimate knowledge of stealing and cheating and the methods by which these crimes were done, so that the State may collect its own share of taxes and prosecute the crooks intelligently.

THE NEW highway commissioner has beaten down the fixed, conspiratorial prices of gravel from 90 cents a yard to 35 cents, and of shell for paving from $2 to $1.11, and many parasites have been shaken out of this department, which was the haven of some of the lowest types of grafters.

The reforms have proceeded quietly, although quickly. Publicity must fight its way out of Louisiana in the best of times, and in times such as these the clang of national politics and world affairs drowns out good news from down yonder. They are important basic reforms, but other reforms and retribution seem to be on the way.

Gov. Jones of Louisiana says he has no political ambitions beyond the four years of his Governorship, in which he cannot succeed himself. Although he has given Louisiana the greatest public service that any State has enjoyed in this time, he says public service is out of his line.

League Sanctuary

By Felix Morley

Editor of The Post

Invitation From Princeton

"IF THE HILL will not come to Mahomet," says an ancient provero quoted by Francis Bacon in his essay "Of Boldness," "then Mahomet will go to the hill!" The saying is brought irresistibly to mind by the news that Princeton University has invited the technical services of the League of Nations to establish themselves at that educational center for the duration of the war.

Because of its association with Woodrow Wilson; because of its accessibility both to New York and to Washington; because of its recent development as a research center, Princeton would be a most logical location for the League's technical experts, if it is deemed desirable to move them from their present precarious habitat at Geneva.

Incidentally, the invitation which was cabled to Switzerland on July 12 was signed not only by President Harold Dodd, of Princeton University, but also by Dr. Carl Tenbroeck, head of the Princeton division of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, and by Dr. Frank Aydelotte, former president of Swarthmore College and now director of the Institute for Advanced Study, at Princeton.

In the American Institute of Public Opinion there is still another educational agency, established at Princeton, the cooperation of which might be enlisted in the effort to transfer the nonpolitical services of the League to a happier environment. Dr. George Gallup heads this institute and it would be interesting to see the results of a Nation-wide Gallup poll on the proposal.

II

AS IS THE CASE with most promising suggestions, a good deal of thought was given to this one before any news of the development leaked out. The first initiative can perhaps be attributed to Dr. Mary E. Woolley, former president of Mount Holyoke College. This spring, before the start of the blitzkrieg, Dr. Woolley organized an American committee to assist in maintaining the economic, social and humanitarian work of the League of Nations. Action at Geneva had already separated these technical activities from the political functions of the League, which made it easier for President Roosevelt to give public support to Dr. Woolley's plan.

This volunteer committee, including many Americans who have served on various technical committees of the League, was barely launched, however, before the German drive in western Europe brought further disastrous consequences for the Geneva organization.

With the collapse of France the headquarters of the League of Nations became completely isolated, an island surrounded by a sea of totalitarian power hostile to the League idea. Technicians on the League Secretariat are now unable to leave Geneva, if there, or to get back to their base if they happen to be in other countries. Faced with this problem the only solution found by M. Joseph Avenol, the Secretary-General of the League, has been to demand the resignations of a steadily increasing number of highly trained Secretariat officials.

At this juncture, about a month ago, a prominent member of the League Secretariat—Mr. Arthur Sweetser—arrived in this country on leave. It is hard to say whence the suggestion first emanated, but from Mr. Sweetser's consultations with Americans interested in international cooperation arose the idea which has now crystallized in the formal invitation sent from Princeton to Geneva.

As the scheme developed there were a few who argued that if League technicians were asked to carry on their scientific work in this country it should be by formal invitation of the United States Government and that they should be established in Washington. Wiser counsel prevailed. It was pointed out that the purpose was to bring the international officials here for only a limited period—for the duration of the war, which has isolated Geneva and stultified all its technical work. Another argument against an official invitation, and location in Washington, was the risk this would stir the hostility of rampant isolationists and create a wholly unnecessary incident in an election year.

Care has been taken, however, to keep the Department of State informed on all stages in the development of the plan. And the attitude of the Administration has been sympathetic. After all, the Government has cooperated officially in all the technical work of research, statistical compilation and exchange of analytical material which it is now proposed to carry on from Princeton. And, from the immigration viewpoint, all that is involved is the temporary and supervised admission of a few dozen economists, scientists and public health experts.

Moreover, in contrast with refugee scholars who have taken posts in American universities, these League experts would not be displacing any Americans from jobs but rather, to a small extent, creating new employment over here.

III

CURIOUSLY ENOUGH, the chief difficulty in the way of consummation of the plan seems to lie in Geneva. M. Avenol, the French Secretary-General of the League, has as yet sent no definite reply to the invitation cabled him from Princeton a week ago.

It is natural that he should wish to look at all sides of a project which would detach a large part of the Secretariat from his immediate supervision. But as this supervision is now like that of a watcher beside a bier, it is not believed that the Secretary-General will long resist a proposal which would reanimate and regenerate at least a part—and that, in the minds of many, the most important part—of the League's activities.

Another good reason for believing that the Princeton invitation will be accepted is the presence in Washington now of a Norwegian statesman who from the formation of the League of Nations has been one of its most influential advocates and most efficient collaborators. This is Carl Joachim Hambro, who was president of the last League Assembly and is chairman of that body's supervisory commission, a permanent control organ which exercises great authority during the long intervals between Assembly sessions.

In his own country Dr. Hambro holds a position analagous to that of Speaker of the House of Representatives, and has done so for many years. Because of the Nazi occupation of Norway he is now an exile, unable to preside over a Parliament which has been broken up and scattered by German troops. But his authority with regard to the international organization at Geneva, enfeebled though it is, continues. And he is greatly interested in the scheme for moving the technical services of the League to this country.

Perhaps nothing illustrates the uneven character of the world's political development better than this curious situation. Here is a great Norwegian Liberal, at present in Washington because forced by the Germans to abandon his parliamentary duties in his own country. Yet because he continues to function as an international official Dr. Hambro is able to utilize his time here in behalf of the plan to transfer the League's technical services from Geneva to the campus of Princeton.

IV

THE SECRETARIAT sections which would be brought over here, according to present design, are three in number. They are those dealing with Financial and Economic Problems; with International Public Health, and with Narcotic Control. In all of these activities, now brought to a virtual halt, the United States has for years shown active interest and has given wholehearted official collaboration.

The importance to reconstruction of the work of the Economic and Financial Section is obvious. It is vital regardless of the outcome of the war and the character of the eventual peace. If we assume a world in which there will continue to be exchange of products and financial transactions between nations, then the factual and statistical studies of this League agency will also continue to be of great value. They supplement, coordinate and give a broader viewpoint to the publications of the commercial agencies of the various national governments.

The same, perhaps with greater emphasis, can be said of the League's work to control the spread of those epidemics, and the international traffic in illegal, habit-forming narcotics, which in the one case knows no political frontiers and in the other recognizes their restrictions only as something which can be violated with profit.

Temporary settlement of these League agencies in the United States would be desirable from the humanitarian viewpoint alone. It seems particularly desirable from the viewpoint of a nation still unscourged by war and interested in maintaining for itself those very standards which the technical work of the League seeks to make universal.

It seems even more desirable that the creative science of the group of men who can do this work should be fostered, for the benefit of civilization, by the one Nation which is now clearly in a position to provide the necessary sanctuary.

6-Foot Birds Had 6-Foot Names

Giant loon-like birds with savage teeth, who lived in the salt sea which covered Kansas 100,000,000 years ago, are described in a checklist of fossil birds of North America just released by the Smithsonian Institution. The list was prepared by Dr. Alexander Wetmore, assistant secretary of the institution.

These birds, formidably dubbed Hesperornithiformes, reached 6 feet in length and were the oldest true birds of which traces have been found on this continent. They were contemporary with the dinosaur, just fading from the scene before the encroaching mammals.

Fossil remains of another bird, somewhat resembling the gull, also have been found. The institution pointed to the difficulty of locating the fragile bones of birds, of which little trace remains after a few years' exposure to the weather.

The booing of his words at the Democratic convention "proves" how seriously the party's tradition is impaired, Mark Sullivan writes

Tradition Impaired

By Mark Sullivan

Nothing Else for Democrats to Do

THERE WERE the New Dealers. And there were the Democrats. That these two are quite different, everybody understands. In the Chicago convention, the New Dealers got everything.

To say the Democrats got nothing will be quite wrong. The Democrats got a candidate for President who, as the scene appears now, will get more votes than any other nominee would have got, and will carry into office more local Democratic candidates than any other.

But if we go back of the convention and review the series of events during a year past, then the Democrats have seen much pass away from them. Had Mr. Roosevelt a year ago followed the historic rule, had he gone on the assumption that, of course, no Democratic President would seek a third term, in defiance of party doctrine and national tradition—in that event some other candidate would have emerged, someone like Secretary of State Cordell Hull, for example, who might have had as good a chance to win in November as Mr. Roosevelt now has.

It was Mr. Roosevelt's holding himself open for another nomination that, largely, gave him the power he wielded over the convention. For by holding himself open, he prevented the development of other candidates. By the time the convention met, there was nothing for the Democrats to do but nominate Mr. Roosevelt.

HAD EVENTS the past year gone the other way, had Mr. Roosevelt eliminated himself and had a man like Mr. Hull been nominated—in that event Democrats would have preserved their party character and tradition. How seriously that tradition is now impaired, is sufficiently proved by a single incident of the convention, the most incredible thing that ever occurred in a gathering of Democrats—the booing of the name of Thomas Jefferson. (It occurred when Senator Carter Glass quoted Jefferson's opposition to a third term.)

The Democrats were willing to nominate Mr. Roosevelt. They were decidedly and obviously and vociferously unwilling to nominate Mr. Wallace for Vice President. This difference shows the distinction that was in the minds of the delegates. They were willing to nominate Mr. Roosevelt because of the votes he would get in the election—for that reason they were willing to disregard the distaste which many of them have for much of the New Deal. But when it came to Mr. Wallace they were free to show their real feeling. Mr. Wallace was not indispensable as a vote-getter—hardly any candidate for Vice President in either party ever brings in many votes that would not be received by the head of the ticket anyhow.

BUT MR. WALLACE meant much as a symbol of the New Deal. He is a more true symbol of the New Deal than Mr. Roosevelt. He understands the implications of the New Deal philosophy in its farther reaches much more than Mr. Roosevelt does. Mr. Wallace would be willing to push the New Deal to a further degree of change in the American form of society and government than Mr. Roosevelt contemplates. All this the delegates know or sensed—and they did not want to nominate Mr. Wallace. They gave him the nomination only because Mr. Roosevelt wanted him to have it—rumor flew about the convention, whether accurately or not, that unless they made Mr. Wallace the Vice Presidential nominee, Mr. Roosevelt might withhold his acceptance as head of the ticket.

The campaign will be strictly a New Deal one. It will be a campaign on domestic issues, with the New Dealers pushing their program further than ever, attacking the conservatives more bitterly than ever. Almost certainly the part that the war and foreign relations will play in the campaign will be slight.

WHEN MR. ROOSEVELT first began his course of silence on a third term, the reason given was that if he took himself out of the picture he would weaken the position of America in foreign relations. At that time, any time up to about six weeks ago, Mr. Roosevelt was willing to go far in aid to Britain. This willingness of his was believed to be a help to Britain. It was said that if Mr. Roosevelt announced retirement, it would discourage the Allies, encourage Germany.

This attitude Mr. Roosevelt continued to a climax when he sent messages of sympathy to France, and, in his speech at Charlottesville, Va., described Mussolini's attack upon France as a "stab in the back." From that point, during some weeks, Mr. Roosevelt has been in retreat. The Democratic position on foreign relations as now expressed in the platform and otherwise, does not differ materially from the Republican.

The campaign will be on domestic issues. In it there will be a strange condition. Democratic candidates running for Congress will battle for Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Wallace. They will battle for the New Deal as laid down by those two. But they will think of themselves as Democrats. If elected, they will have no intention of being as New Deal as Mr. Wallace is.

Today And Tomorrow

The Two Conventions

IN BOTH party conventions this year it has been difficult until the very end to perceive how much the course of events in the outer world was determining the final result of the proceedings. Until Thursday at Philadelphia and until Thursday at Chicago an observer might have thought that the moods and maneuvers of factions and of politicians were still as significant as they have been in so many other political conventions.

In fact, both conventions were dominated by the historic events which are shaking the world, and both conventions were driven by these events to doing what would ordinarily have been regarded as politically impossible.

UNDER THE ORDINARY rules of politics it was inconceivable that the Republican Party would nominate for President a candidate who had just joined the party, had never held office under the party, and had never participated in party affairs. Such a thing has never happened before in the history of American politics. It would not have happened this year if total war had not begun a month before the convention and if Hitler had not conquered France before the party met in Philadelphia. Wendell Willkie was nominated because all the other Republican candidates had misjudged the course of events, because he alone was aware of them and he alone seemed ready to deal with them. When the convention met at Philadelphia, the choice was between the nomination of Willkie and the disintegration of the Republican Party under the impact of events. Mr. Willkie was chosen because he had to be.

The nomination of Roosevelt for a third term was under ordinary circumstances no less impossible. It may be that a President in office could by the exercise of patronage compel his party to renominate him for a third term. But what he could not do by the exercise of patronage is to get himself renominated without serious opposition. Now the plain truth of the matter is that there was no serious opposition to the Roosevelt nomination, no open resistance on principle and only a little desultory and half-hearted opposition in fact. There was some resentment, there were misgivings, there was a certain amount of covert maneuvering which expressed itself in a dispute over the platform, and there was a minor explosion over the Vice Presidency. But ugless there were developments which were not visible to me here in Chicago, there is a less formidable opposition within the party to Roosevelt's third nomination than there was to his second.

THE REASON IS evident. Just as the Republicans had only Willkie, so the Democrats had only Roosevelt. There was no other Democrat available who was prepared for the situation in which the country finds itself: had there been such a candidate available he would at least have been brought forward. The fact is that Roosevelt was renominated and the third term tradition was broken because no other Democrat emerged into public view with the necessary qualifications needed in the extraordinary circumstances of the time.

We should be deceiving ourselves, I believe, and misrepresenting the facts if we sought to explain either nomination by describing the political strategy and the showmanship which were employed in achieving it. That would be partisan blindness. Only the Democratic partisan will pretend that Mr. Willkie was nominated because large financial interests were for him and because many telegrams were sent and because his campaign was conducted so brilliantly; Mr. Willkie was nominated because in his party he was uniquely qualified in the midst of an extraordinary situation. Only the Republican partisan will pretend that Roosevelt was nominated because the city machines were for him or because the New Dealers organized the pressure groups which have had benefits from the Treasury. Mr. Roosevelt was nominated because in his party he was uniquely qualified in the midst of an extraordinary situation.

Both Mr. Willkie and Mr. Roosevelt were nominated because they were the men who most obviously and clearly represented the profound sense of the American people that they are facing one of the very greatest crises in their history. All other considerations become unimportant, and that is why both conventions did such inconceivable and impossible things.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED in these conventions is, I believe, a clew to what is going to happen during the campaign. Each candidate will find himself continually beset: The politicians will advise him more or less accurately what the voters are thinking and feeling at the moment; his own understanding will tell him that events will in fact determine what the Nation is going to think and feel. If he follows the advice of the politicians and seeks immediate applause, he will make the mistake that Mr. Dewey made: He will find himself confounded by events. If he follows his understanding, taking care not to let the excitement of campaigning and crowds and conferences and receptions cut him off from knowledge of what is going on, he will gain in strength as events vindicate him.

Mr. Roosevelt made it plain in his address to the convention that he intends to conduct his campaign by keeping as close as he can to the events as they unfold. That is one of the most astute political decisions of his whole career. For the people will go to the man who seems most clearly to have foreseen what happens. They will regard that as a test of his capacity to deal with what is going to happen. Mr. Willkie will do well to realize this right away, and to take measures at once to protect himself against becoming so engulfed in the mere procedure of campaigning that he loses touch with the immense realities which will determine the result.

THE POLITICIANS of both parties would like to fight the campaign of 1936 over again. That was as evident in Chicago as it was in Philadelphia. But 1940 is as far removed from 1936 as Hitler is from Queen Victoria. The strength of Willkie and Roosevelt is that they know this. The basic fact about public sentiment is that the people know this. But by and large the professional politicians do not know it, or knowing it, they are unable to disentangle themselves from the routine of politics. That is why neither convention, as long as it was in the hands of politicians, could take a position on any issue of the future, could do anything except to approve at Chicago and disapprove at Philadelphia the work of the past.

And that is why when the politicians had played their part as long as they could play it, both conventions accepted leadership and left to their chosen leaders the task of making policy for the future.

Traveler's Tale

IF IT IS no more than a traveler's tale, this anecdote from Osbert Sitwell's "Escape With Me" (Harrison-Hilton, $3) is still of a quality that gives the essence of the book . . . In some unnamed town of India the monkeys had become too numerous and pestiferous. Being held sacred, they could not be killed. Western efficiency was called in. The authorities brought up motor trucks, collected and loaded the monkeys, and drove a hundred miles or so into the jungle. There the monkeys were released and dispersed readily in the treetops. The drivers, pleased with a good job, sought the shade and ate a picnic lunch, taking further time for siesta. Then they returned to the motor trucks. So did the monkeys, resuming their places as passengers. As they outnumbered the drivers, and were resolute, it was impossible to dislodge them.

"They were driven back to the city, where their unexpected and stately re-entrance caused considerable emotion. They seemed to be bowing to the spectators in answer to no apparent applause . . . After they had swarmed back into palm trees and the eaves of temples, they could long be heard chattering freely, discussing, no doubt, their enjoyable outing in the country" . . . A good time was had by all—except the truck drivers and the villagers.

In general that is about what happens when one attempts to "hustle the East." It just goes along for the ride, and then resumes its ancient way. As Mr. Sitwell visited the Orient neither to improve nor to reprove, but for to admire and for to see, he managed to get the best of it.

The journey was a long-cherished project, first inspired by "the Indian room" in his grandmother's house, a Victorian repository of objects from foreign parts, named perhaps from a similar apartment at Osborne, Queen Victoria's own house. So Mr. Sitwell went by the Mediterranean and Red Seas, by the Coast of Coromandel and Malabar, by all the ways and names of old enchantment, and stopped first in Saigon. There he found a kind of petrified French town, as curious and remote from its origins, though in reverse direction, as the Indian room in an English house.

Thence he went to Angkor-Vat, the strange dead city in the jungle, once the capital of "the king of the angels." Once, too, a Leper King ruled there over the Cambodian, or Khmer Empire. And a Snake-Queen was his Egeria, according to legend, whatever she may have been in fact. Sixty square miles of ruins remain. When this city was alive, in the thirteenth century, a visiting Chinese author recorded its pomps and glories with admiration, and as becomes a foreigner in any land, was greatly shocked by the immorality of the people. Among other deplorable habits, he said the Khmers took too many baths. How he failed to remark that bathtubs do not constitute culture is inexplicable. But apparently he did not think it odd that one of the principal industries by which this magnificence thrived was the collection and export of—kingfishers' wings. . . . It seems a frail basis for a kingdom, and proved so.

As the kingfisher plumage was shipped to China, no doubt it seemed a very reasonable business to a Chinese . . . Mr. Sitwell followed the trade, and sojourned next in Shanghai and then in Peiping.

Needless to say, he liked China and the Chinese, as all contemplative and philosophical persons do. One shares his impressions of a race that had learned the art of enjoying the every-day delights of existence, food and drink, conversation, business and leisure and the pageant of the streets, in defiance of immediate discomfort and an uncertain future. In that upside-down world the wild Mongol nomads, coming to the cities to sell horses, invest the proceeds in jewels, especially gem jade, as the most secure form of wealth.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Consider the Yacht Club

(Reprinted by Request.)

A yacht club is a small body of boat owners entirely surrounded by landlubbers, who sit in green rocking chairs wondering what it is all about and urging that the steward be fired and replaced by one who can put out a cheaper cocktail with the 50-cent lunch.

Half of 1 per cent of the members of the modern Indoor Yacht Club own boats. These members chain their boats in front of the clubhouse and spend the entire summer going back and forth between their yachts and the club by rowboat or power dinghy. They seem never to tire of doing this. At the end of each season a pewter cup is given the yachtsman who has made the greatest number of nonstop trips between the boat and his craft.

Once in a great while some yachtsman, after rowing to his yacht, unhitches the thing, hoists sail, cranks the engine and starts away. Members of the Rocking Chair Fleet, startled by the spectacle of a yacht really under way, report the incident to the board of governors. Whereupon the other yacht owners hop into their white pants, grab their binoculars, dash to their own yachts and start in pursuit, determined to find out where the missing yachtsman is going. This is called a cruise.

A yacht club is one of the few institutions of modern civilization opened and closed by guns. Every yacht club has as one of its indispensable possessions a small brass cannon. This is fired twice a day and serves, among other things, to let the world know that the club is still solvent. One shot is fired at 8 o'clock every morning. This notifies the seven or eight men aboard boats that another day has rolled around.

For visiting yachtsmen it is the first call for aromatic spirits.

The second shot is fired at sunset. This notifies the entire membership that each member is a day older and that all drinking from that hour on comes under the head of regular evening business.

How To Be a Commodore

The active head of a yacht club is called a commodore. A commodore is a cross between a humidor and a matador. He has to be kept damp like a humidor and bull-throwing like a matador.

Being a commodore entitles you to wear a motorman's coat, white duck pants and a cap with monogram, wreath and flags on it.

In most clubs a commodore's boat must draw at least seven feet of water, and the commodore must draw at least six feet of gin.

Yachtsmen also use flags or pennants for communication purposes. No yacht is complete without a chest of flags. Nobody knows exactly what any combination of flags means, but the skipper who hangs them up is sure to get an answer. The code runs something like this:

Three plain white flags under six purple flags: "The owner is aboard."

Six purple flags under three white flags: "The owner is in no condition to know whether he is aboard or ashore."

Susan Ertz Calls Peace Talk Untrue

Hitler Just Wasting Breath in Offering Britain Chance to Yield, Author Says; Describes Women's Work in War

By Dudley Harmon

If all British people feel as does novelist Susan Ertz, Hitler was just wasting his breath in making a peace move in his speech yesterday. Miss Ertz, who arrived in this country from England only a week or so ago, says that peace rumors are "German propaganda," and that Great Britain is firmly rallied behind Winston Churchill to fight it out to the end.

The author of "Mme. Claire" and other successful novels was talking yesterday of the tremendous work her countrywomen are doing to win this war. Some of them now drive heavy fire engines and have taken lessons in how to deal with chemicals so as to be able to quench fires set by incendiary bombs. Many erstwhile parlormaids and cooks are working in munitions factories. The million or so men who are cited in press reports as still idle despite the need for great war effort, are actually unemployable, Miss Ertz says.

Tells of Taking Care of Refugees

In uniform up to the day she sailed, Miss Ertz was a member of the Voluntary Women's Defense Group. This means that since even before the war, she was taking courses in home defense, how to detect gas, how to deal with gas casualties.

"These women did wonderful work when the Channel islands were evacuated," said the dark and handsome novelist yesterday. "The refugees were taken to England by plane, and landed at 3 o'clock in the morning. A few hours later, homes had been found for all of them."

Miss Ertz's husband is on a government mission which takes him to Egypt, New Zeland, and half a dozen far-flung places. He fought in the last war, and at the beginning of this told his wife he didn't think young people would go through another one.

"But I take it all back" he said later. According to his wife, the youth of Britain is just as determined to fight to the end as are government leaders.

On leaving for the United States Miss Ertz offered to take along a group of refugee children, but all her friends said they preferred to keep their youngsters with them.

Mlle. Curie Stays in London

The writer just missed seeing Eve Curie, who fled to London after France surrendered. She reports that Mlle. Curie is now working for the British Broadcasting Co. and has said she will not leave London. Only a few weeks ago the glamorous author was in Washington as the guest of Mrs. Roosevelt.

Now beginning another novel—Miss Ertz said it was impossible to do any work in London—she also hopes to lecture and do magazine work in this country. Miss Ertz will leave in about two weeks for a visit to the West Coast. Her brother and sister-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Coleridge Ertz, whom she is visiting here, are likewise planning a trip West.

Yesterday the novelist was guest of honor at a cocktail party given by her relatives. Among the many who dropped by were Jacques Dumaine, of the French Embassy; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Boeckel, the Escott Reids, of the Canadian Legation, and Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tuckerman.

Scotia Unit Will Hear War Stories

Frances E. Woodworth Finds They Have More Appeal Than Dramatic Readings

By Jessie Ash Arndt,
The Post Club Editor.

Dramatic readings cannot compare with simple accounts of war experiences in audience appeal, Frances Eaton Woodworth has discovered since coming to the Capital a few weeks ago.

Miss Woodworth, niece of Representative Charles Aubry Eaton, of New Jersey, is scheduled to speak next Saturday night at the benefit being sponsored at the Raleigh Hotel by the Daughters of Scotia, for British relief. Although she will present readings, she knows from experience that her audience will really be waiting to hear her stories of England after war was declared last September.

Miss Frances Woodworth

She has letters and clippings from the press with flattering comments on her dramatic work while she was a student for two years at Royal Albert Hall in London. But her story of the human drama there in which she played her role after the war started has been the headliner for all of her programs since her return to this country, and these have all been for war relief benefits.

She went to Aspenden Cottage, the seventeenth century home of Mrs. Henry F. Jebb and the late Capt. Jebb in Hartfordshire, Buntingford, when the declaration of war suddenly halted her work in dramatic art. Soon after she arrived, Mrs. Jebb, who had organized several child health clinics and had been doing important Red Cross work for many months, was called to London as commandant of the Red Cross there. Other members of the family left for different kinds of war service and Miss Woodworth found herself in charge of the house with the old servants (the young ones all having responded to the call to service).

They were all countryside characters, with names as quaint as they were. Mole, the gardener, had been on the Jebb estate for 30 years and had served in every war up to the present one. There were also his wife, who clumped along cheefully with the use of a cane; Mrs. Pig and Mrs. Plum. Mrs. Woodworth had such details to attend to as going from room to room every evening at the hour designated for the blackout, to see that everything was dark. Black paper, thumb tacks and flash lights were almost unobtainable after the blackout regulation went into effect, she said.

City and Country Women Clash

In the daytime she went to the child health clinic in Buntingford by bicycle. There one of her duties was to act as peacemaker in flare-ups between the mothers who had been evacuated from London slums with their children and billeted with the country families and the country women. The latter, who worked from early morning until night, found many of the city women unwilling to assume their share of the household duties.

Miss Woodworth time and again explained to the city women that they were not in the country on a vacation—that it was war, and to the country women, that the hardships their men were enduring in military service were greater than those of harboring city evacuees in their homes. She believes a change in the attitude of these people has since taken place.

After nearly three years' stay in England, Miss Woodworth was reluctant to leave. When her aunt, Mrs. Horace Eaton, of Montreal, and her cousin, the late Miss Blanche Steele, booked passage on the Athenia, she declined to come with them. Her cousin was lost when the ship was bombed, but her aunt, who is over 80, was rescued and is now in Toronto.

She returned to America late last fall after a hazardous voyage aboard the American Trader, through a hurricane, and was ill all the way. After spending the winter and early spring with her parents in Florida, she came to Washington and is now at the Wardman Park.

Body Hair Removal Now Safe

Science Disputes Old Wives Tales, Presents Latest Word on Subject

By Carolyn Abbott

SUPERFLUOUS hair is probably the major beauty problem of women in summer because of the popularity of play togs and swim suits. It is something about which a great deal of misinformation and "old wives' tales" have developed. Many of these theories have been refuted by A. F. Niemoller in his new book, "Superfluous Hair and It's Removal," which presents the latest scientific word on the problem.

This book, written by the author of "Feminine Hygiene in Marriage," takes the guessing and uncertainty out of the whole question of hair removers. The writer endorses, rejects and condemns the various types and temporary methods now practiced.

Here are some of Niemoller's findings:

Superfluous hair is due primarily to the improper functioning of endocrine (ductless) glands. Heredity and thyroid glands also have a bearing on too little or too much hair. Overexposure to strong sunlight also seems to stimulate hair growth.

Hair removers, though often accused of stimulating or coarsening growth, do not really have any effect.

Shaving Harmless

Contrary to popular belief, shaving does not increase the rate of hair growth, coarsen or change its color. New hairs that grow out from a shaved surface may seem coarser because they have been cut off squarely and grow out with blunt, stubby ends instead of the usual, finely tapered, soft ends of undisturbed hair.

No permanent removal of hair is absolutely safe but some methods are reasonably so.

Among the methods of hair removing discussed by Niemoller, who speaks with the authority of A.B., B.S. and M.A. degrees and scientific research as a background, are: electrolysis, diathermy, X-ray, depilatories, abrasives, shaving, tweezing, waxes, and bleaches. The three permanent hair removers, according to the author are: electrolysis, diathermy and X-ray. The temporary methods of hair removals are chemical and mechanical. The chemical methods comprise depilatories of various kinds and the mechanical methods include abrasives, depilatory waxes, shaving, tweezing or plucking. Bleaching is a chemical process but strictly speaking is not a remover.

Electrolysis and diathermy receive the approval of Niemoeller in his book. Of the two, preference is given to electrolysis for the permanent removal of hair. X-ray, the author condemns as dangerous and unsatisfactory. He says, "have nothing to do with any method of hair removal utilizing X-ray or radium in any fashion or in combination with any thing else."

Pumice Stone Method

All permanent hair removers are expensive and none are advised for destroying the hair of the arm pits, as the skin in this area is too sensitive. Shaving, according to Niemoller, is the best method for removing under arm hair. Supplementary to shaving, he advises the daily use of a fine abrasive. But to remove hair from the lower and upper arms he recommends a combination of bleaching and abrasives. Make a mixture of six parts baking soda, four parts strained lemon juice, and one part peroxide, with just enough water to dissolve the ingredients. After cleansing the arms at night, apply the mixture and let it remain on until the next morning. Then wash off with hot water and a mild soap. Repeat the process for a week, then gently rub away hairs on arm with a fine pumice stone, taking care not to bruise or abrade the skin.

Depilatories are probably best suited for removing hair from the legs. But shaving and the combination method of bleaching and pumice stone rubbing also are highly recommended by the author.

Use Lotions With Great Care To Avoid Stains

Summer months we use a great deal of suntan lotion, toilet water, deodorants. Grand ideas—but a little hard on our clothes. Many suntan lotions contain tannic acid and tannin is one of the hardest of all stains to remove. Toilet water and perfume are tannin stains, so too are fruit juices, ginger ale, coca cola, beer and mixed drinks.

The longer you allow a tannin stain to remain on your clothes the harder it is to take out. Be sure to tell your drycleaner the cause of the stain. When he knows it is a tannin stain he will be sure no heat reaches the spot for heat sets the stain and darkens it.

Darker shades of powder often cause discolorations around the neckline of dresses and coats. Stains such as these can be removed in reputable drycleaning, but if the garment is worn quite a few times without being drycleaned the powder works into the fabric to such an extent that it is sometimes impossible to remove it.

Lotions for the treatment of poison ivy and oak sometimes cause bad stains. Keep such lotions away from your clothes because some of these remedies contain dyes and other iron compounds which leave a rust-like stain.

Grandma's Bathing Suits Didn't Tell All Secrets

By JEAN BROWNELL

WHAT EVER BECAME OF . . . Carrie Weaver Smith, former superintendent of the National Training Schools for Girls? She's "started life all over again at 54" by buying a book store, and finds the job a peaceful one after hectic days at the school.

DR. SMITH

Her bedroom is a cot behind one stack of books; her closet, a few hangers surrounded by book shelves. There are as many volumes in her kitchen cabinet as many people have in their libraries.

"I'm on my own at last, and it's swell," she says. "I still have my enemies, of course—people who tried to force me to leave Washington. But I stuck—wanted to be around to ask an impudent question now and then . . . I expect to be blamed for everything that goes wrong at the training school for the next 20 years," she adds drily.

It looks as though the dining room has gone for good. Apartment dwellers long have had to be satisfied with a "dinette" or a "junior dining room." Come now the Carroll Greenoughs, who in remodeling the Georgetown mansion at Thirty-first and P streets, eliminated the dining room altogether. Said it was too much trouble.

The German Charge d'Affaires and Mrs. Hans Thomsen, waiting for their car after a large party, found themselves in a crowd of other guests clustered under the porte cochere. Apparently to save everyone embarrassment, they slipped back into the house, found a vacant room and did their waiting in privacy.

AT THE LUNCH COUNTER—Don't be alarmed if some day soon your most lackadaisical soda jerker snaps to attention when you order pie and inquires, "Would you care for an order of vanilla or chocolate ice cream on it?" That merely means he's been reading Ice Cream Currents, house organ of ice cream merchants.

Advantages of pie a la mode, according to the magazine, are that "the pie tastes better, the eater is happier and the store increases its average check from 5 cents to 10 cents." Out of 36 possible methods of suggesting pie a la mode to a customer, the most effective one is that cited above. It's the old choice principle; the customer's mind is too busy wavering between vanilla and chocolate to notice the trap he's fallen into.

Turn Nerves Into Charm

DOES A smudge on the mirror seem a major tragedy to you? Does the careless remark of a friend torture you into tears?

Such hypersensitiveness is a sign that your nerves are strained to the breaking point. Treated with understanding, nerves become a source of charm, vitality; abused, they can make you wretched, may cause physical ills.

In times like these all of us undergo many stresses and strains which exhaust our nervous energies. And, when your narves are low, you are like a person looking at life through the wrong end of a telescope—molehills grow into mountains.

A psychiatrist would tell you that your first need is to build up your exhausted nerve energies—by walks, exercise in the fresh air, a well-balanced diet, plenty of restful sleep. Learn to "save" yourself, let someone else take the brunt of things for a while.

And to establish a right focus on life, turn your mind outward. Find something that interests you—a lot. Did you ever trace your family tree? Or make hooked rugs? Or raise honey bees?

Try to have some activity, too, where you can work constructively with other people. Help with the Girl Scout group. Teach a Sunday School class.

Soon to your happy surprise you find that molehills are only molehills—that you are filled with a zest for living, have abundant energy for the important and joyous things of life.

In our 40-page booklet, How to Avoid and Overcome Nervous Troubles, a famous psychologist tells how to conserve energies, direct them into happier channels. Explains causes of "nerves"—irritability, insomnia, other "nerve" symptoms.

Style Cycles In Furniture Have Innings

By Elizabeth McRae Boykin

We read with a smile the too-sure dismissals of nineteenth century furniture designs by writers of a few years back. It was all bad, they agreed glibly, skipping over what they felt to be a whole misguided era, decoratively speaking. In fact these writers of the early twentieth century felt toward the taste of their immediate predecessors just as vastly superior as we do toward the 1900's and the 1910's.

Maybe, who knows, the golden oak and mission that makes us shudder so will be collector's items to our grandchildren who will wonder why we didn't treasure it tenderly to pass along. Just as we blame poor dear grahdma for not cherishing the rosewood and black walnut she chucked out for the golden oak that we chucked out for colonial or taupe mohair. But there's nothing new about that. The generation that produced Chippendale and Sheraton snubbed Queen Anne styles. The great Georgians were in turn snubbed by the creators of directoire and empire fashions.

Tire of Old

One very good reason why each generation disapproves the taste of the previous era is merely that the young folks are tired of what the old folks have around the place. It's really as simple as that. Along with the fact that there is no perspective on a period of design too close to us. Not to mention the fact that there's been no time for sifting the bad from the good. Remember, even that most classic period in furniture history, the eighteenth century, produced its quota of monstrosities, but a sorting out process has been at work these many years to veil the mistakes in oblivion.

All this is just a friendly word of warning about slamming our doors on so-called modern. It's a vital force that will surely have its day in the sun. It has its masterpieces along with its miscarriages, but time alone will be able to tell for sure which is which. In any case, modern is affecting all our homes today whether we recognize it as such or not. If we haven't admitted any specifically modern furniture, we're using colors, textures, patterns that are modern either obviously or subtly. And many contemporary pieces of furniture are traditional in source but strongly tinctured with modernism in translation. Even Victorian, a style that might be said to be at the opposite end of the scale from modern, is interpreted today in modern terms and turning out to be jovially genial with modern. So—watch out about being too final in condemning modern all in a heap.

Cleaning Summer Shoes

Suede, buckskin and fabric shoes keep in good condition if brushed often with a stiff brush. Keep the brush well cleaned and dry. Be careful when rubbing with the metal-bristled brushes not to tear the shoe material. Daily care of white and other light-colored leather shoes keeps them in good condition. Remove soil as quickly as possible to save energy and the leather in the shoes.

Today's Health Talk

Treatment of Sunstroke

Heat stroke or sunstroke is due to an upset of the heat regulating centers of the body, and the worst symptoms, the actual "stroke," loss of consciousness and collapse, are preceded by a period when the victim becomes very sensitive to the oppressive atmosperic conditions, gets pale with clammy skin, feels weak, may be nauseated. Shortly after the skin, instead of being clammy, feels hot and dry and mentality is disturbed.

Treatment in these early stages will ward off the serious later stages. Cold water on the skin to reduce temperature is the indication. Ice is not so effective as cold water evaporated by a fan. The evaporation of a quart of water removes seven times as much heat as the melting of two pounds of ice.

The water should be thrown on the body with some force; from a hose, if available, or sluiced on from a bucket. This impingement of the water on the skin is a stimulant and very valuable because the real danger of heat stroke is circulatory collapse.

Of course, remove the heat exhausted victim to the coolest place that can be found, away from the sun.

The ideal treatment is to remove all the clothes, wrap the patient in a sheet and put him on a cot on a rubber sheet. A hose is played on him from a distance of several feet. Every two or three minutes a stream of cold water is poured on his head from a distance of 6 to 8 feet. Heat must not be extracted too sudenly and when the body temperature falls to 102 degrees Fabrenheit he is wrapped in blankets.

Anyone who handles one of these patients is liable to report that he is "sizzling hot" to touch. Sometimes the body temperature gets as high as 109 degrees Fahrenheit.

Mothers-to-Be Are Reassured On Skin, Hair

Troubles Will Be Only Temporary, Says Physician

By Ida Jean Kain

YOU may be one of the fortunates whose skin takes on a luminescent quality when you are preparing to present the house with an heir. On the other hand, you may be suddenly introduced to skin troubles as vexing as the mosquitoes in a tropical swamp.

But if you were to consult Dr. Robert R. M. McLaughlin, generally conceded to be one of the leading dermatologists in this country, you would be vastly reassured . . . such conditions as the darkening of the skin, red blotches, blisters, or the appearance of those unaccountable liver spots or tiny veins are only temporary. While a mild skin peeling, which can be furnished by a good paste or lotion formulated for that purpose, is sometimes recommended for the liver spots, most of these annoyances will disappear without outside assistance.

Girdle Air Aid

The one condition which must be guarded against—for there is no correcting it—is the breaking of the skin by overdistension. This produces those tiger stripes the doctor calls striae. Usually these appear on the hips, thighs and abdomen, but they may occur on the upper portion of the body. The remedy is a preventive: Wearing a properly fitted girdle and brassiere which support the excess weight and thus protect the skin from over-stretching.

Whenever Dr. McLaughlin suggests the use of a cream as a lubricant, it is almost certain to be one containing Vitamin D, for experiments have shown it to have great repair value.

The condition of your skin cannot be disassociated from your general condition and dermatologists are apt to look upon a sluggish skin as the sign of an endocrine deficiency. If the sluggishness is pronounced, a pepper-upper in the form of thyroid extract may be prescribed. Your diet has its effect, not only on your health, but also on your skin. Unless you get your share of Vitamin C in your daily menus, you may notice a tendency of the skin to bruise easily.

Care of Hair

Like the skin, the condition of the hair depends upon the general health but during this period scalp or hair troubles may be aggravated. If the prospective mother is acutely nervous, her hair tends to fall out—sometimes in patches. Serenity and good care seem to be the best antidotes for this.

Don't neglect the several minutes' brushing night and morning—that is good exercise for the tiny muscles at the roots of the hair. You might find it advisable to wash your hair somewhat less frequently than customary and in that case Dr. McLaughlin favors the use of a tonic containing a high percentage of alcohol as a substitute cleanser. Your hair should be kept meticulously clean.

You will make it a rule to give your hair and scalp the excellent care they deserve during these months, there is no reason why your tresses shouldn't be lovelier than ever.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man Has Wanton, Runaway Wife and Two Children; Should He Take Wife Back, for Youngsters' Sake? Institutionalize Them? Or Hire a Housekeeper?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a married man of 37. My wife is ten years my junior and we have two children—a girl and a boy, aged 8 and 10, respectively. The first six years of our marriage were happy, all things considered. Then, about four years ago, my wife suddenly became very much interested in dancing. Since we couldn't afford help to look after the children, I suggested that she go dancing with mutual friends and relatives.

Some time later, I realized that dancing was merely her excuse for going out with an unmarried man her own age. I tried to explain to her the dangers of such behavior, and the bad example she was setting the children. But she replied that she was doing nothing wrong, harming no one, just having fun, costing me nothing financially and that I was 20 years behind the times.

I felt that the affair was a temporary flirtation and would soon run its course, so I let matters drift for a year or so. However, it seemed to grow more serious, so finally I asked the young man to stop taking her out. To this he agreed.

After a month or so, my wife went to his home and demanded an explanation for his not seeing her. When she returned home, she told me it was useless for me to try to separate them, and that she was in love with him. I begged her to give him up, for the children's sake, but she was obstinate. Thereafter, they went out together once or twice a week, arriving home at any hour, sometimes under the influence of alcohol.

Things went on like this until last February, when she went out one evening and didn't return for several days. When she came back, I told her if it happened again, I would break up the home. She promised it never would happen again. She said she was through with the man. But two weeks later, she left again—this time with strangers. After three days, she came back (while the children were at school and I was at work) just long enough to get her personal things. I moved with the children to a relative's home, where the children would be cared for.

After a month's absence, my wife came to see the children and expressed a desire to return, "for their sake." Having no faith in her promises, I suggested that she talk to our pastor before we reached any agreement. This she refused to do, and for the last three months she has made no effort to see the children. I have heard (from relatives of hers) that she is living with another man in a nearby city. In the meantime, I have been paying for the children's care and getting along quite well, considering the circumstances.

Now, however, some people are suggesting that I place the children in a home, simply because they are mischievous at times. This I don't want to do, if I can prevent it. Should I permit my wife to return, for the children's sake? Or should I put them in a home? Would it be proper if I hired a housekeeper to take care of the children? Your comment will be appreciated. Sincerely,

WORRIED FATHER.

Better Divorce Wife And Marry Again

DEAR W. F.: It appears to me that your wife is unfit to have charge of—or, for that matter, even to associate with—her children, during these years when they have need of the most responsible kind of training and family influence. And, frankly, I don't like the busybody advice of those people who are suggesting that you put the youngsters "in a home"—by which I assume they mean an institution.

As for the propriety of hiring a housekeeper to live with the children and look after them—nobody in his right mind would cast any aspersions upon such an arrangement, considering the bitter necessities of the situation. By all means follow this plan—rather than put them in a so-called "children's home"—if you can work it out.

It should be possible for you to find a capable, dependable, mother-hearted woman of mature years—perhaps one with "practical nurse's" experience—who will give the children understanding and affection, as well as adequate physical care. The D. C. Employment Center (for domestic help) at 505 K street northwest, might find you such a housekeeper. And you may, of course, extend your search through the many commercial employment agencies in the city; and carry it, as well, to such of the nurses' registeries as have "practical nurses" on call.

You have already shown your wife far more consideration than she deserves. Indeed, I think you have been laxly tolerant of her wilful misconduct. Had you loved her less and the children more, I believe you would have forced a show-down and cleaned up the situation four years ago—at the time when she was reeling home all hours of the night with her young dancing man.

Probably the best thing you could do—"for the children's sake," —would be to divorce her, gain their full custody, and marry again, choosing some fine woman approximately your own age who has a "real feeling" for youngsters, and who would cherish yours as her own. M. H.

Is This Wife Selfish In Avoiding Maternity

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 30 years old and the mother of two children. During my childhood, I was the victim of infantile paralysis and rheumatic fever, which impaired the valves of the heart. The family doctor tells me that I should not have any more children.

Now, my husband says it is a shame not to have another child or two. Hardly a day passes in which he does not urge the idea. While I have never been strong, I have been a good wife and mother and have done everything for the family's well being. Am I selfish in not wanting more children? MRS. W. B.

Man's Wish Is Callous, Outrageous, Stupid

DEAR MRS. B. W.: If what you say is true, concerning your physical condition and your doctor's recommendation—then your husband's insistence on having more children is outrageously selfish and incredibly stupid. Almost he is a fit subject for an alienist. Plainly he isn't thinking in terms of good for the children he has, when he would subject their mother's health to non-essential strain which might take her very life, or, at least, greatly shorten it. Abide by your own well-founded preference; and let him make what adjustment to it he can. M. H.

There's a Woman's Angle on Fishing

Don't be a trout widow while your husband leaves home for the trout stream. Get a rod and reel and creel and go out and catch some trout for yourself. The psychologists say that true marital happiness comes from common interests.

Forget the feminine fishing phobias that are as old as Eve. The idea of baiting a hook with worms should not be repellent. Artificial flies seem to be the accepted bait now, and its just as easy to hook the multicolored midgets on the silken line as it is to thread a needle.

Also the clothes problem is an easy one. The trout don't care a bit for fancy clothes. Fisherwomen should avoid wearing white. The flash of a light garment, alien to the water, will send the trout immediately to a hole. Anglers must stay inconspicuous. Fishing is a solitary sport—and the time to talk is when you have slipped the last trout into the creels.

Harvest Time at Belair

Gathering In the Wheat From Maryland's Acres

BELAIR, one of the historic estates, located at Collington just across from the Bowie race track in nearby Maryland, is primarily recognized as a stock farm. Here William Woodward, New York banker whose racing silks have been prominent on the Nation's tracks in the last decade, owns about 3,500 acres—a good portion in woodland.

These pictures were taken at Belair as the threshing machine and crew set to work harvesting the grain from 90 acres. Another crew was storing hay cut and cured from about 70 acres. The scenes are typical of harvest time on other large farms in this area and will bring nostalgia and longing for the outdoors to many a cooped-up city dweller.

THE colonial mansion at Belair was built by Benjamin Tasker, once president of the Colonial Council of Maryland and later acting Governor of the Free State. One of the older stables, now reserved for blooded stock destined for the races, is patterned after the English stables built in rectangle shape. It was on the spacious pastures of Belair that some of Woodward's best horses first stretched their legs during their yearling life. Hilly terrain, cleared of rocks and trees, gave the youngsters an opportunity to roam in comparative safety.

Gallant Fox, Omaha and other famed racers bred in Kentucky were and are shipped to Belair before being taken up by the racing stables. All feed and bedding used by the stables is grown on the farm. In addition to the thoroughbreds, Woodward has maintained a large stable of Clydesdales which includes a number of imported stallions distributed in the State in the care of agents. This service has produced bigger and stronger draft horses more adapted to farm work. Belair Farms' stock has accounted for many blue ribbons at both county and State fairs.

The Trials of Grooming Topaz for Cat Show

By Scott Hart

GIRLS like to compete in beauty contests. Cats don't. Constance, 10, and Gretel Doerman, 8, groomed their cat Topaz yesterday for a cat beauty contest to be held today and did more chasing than combing.

Being girls, they wondered why cat Topaz didn't want to be pretty and win a prize, which they are sure he will, in the Columbian Cat Fanciers, Inc., show, to open at 9 a. m. today in the auditorium of the Lewis Hotel Training School, 2301 Pennsylvania avenue northwest.

FIRST Gretel and Constance, who live at 1827 Park road northwest, went out in the back yard and caught Topaz. They brought him to the house, put a mirror before him and started to comb. Topaz thought the reflection was another cat and had to be caught again. Then he was put to bed in a basket and told to go to sleep. Again he had to be caught.

MOST of the cats, there will be more than 25 cat colors represented, will be blooded, but alley cats with little more than good soprano voices to recommend them, can be exhibited, according to Miss Mary E. Hantzmon, 312 Maryland avenue northeast, show manager. The show will close at 10 p. m.

600 to Begin U. S. Defense Courses Soon

Vocational Training Will Start Monday; 27 Classes Planned In Nine Subjects

The District's vocational training program for national defense will begin Monday with a full quota of 600 enrollees.

Holding its second special meeting within a week, the Board of Education yesterday approved final plans for the project, which will be financed under a $18,067.50 allotment from the $15,000,000 appropriation by Congress for the national training program.

The District WPA has 500 prospective trainees, Administrator Paul Edwards reported, but in order to spread the benefits it is expected that only about 300 will be taken from work relief rolls. From public employment service registers and the National Youth Administration will come the remaining 300 who can be accommodated.

Twenty-seven classes in nine courses will be given for six weeks beginning Monday. Twelve will be for white students, 15 for colored.

Following are the courses available: Machine shop, automobile shop, aircraft maintenance and repair, electrical shop, sheet metal work, wood work, welding, paint shop and drafting and blueprint reading.

Classes will be held at Abbott and Chamberlain Vocational schools and McKinley High School for white students and at Armstrong High and Phelps Vocational schools for colored.

Instruction will be on an eight-hour day, five-day week basis. Lawson J. Cantrell, assistant superintendent of schools, said night courses might be offered later for employed persons if the demand was sufficient and funds available.

Washington Scout troops yesterday joined the campaign to clean the Capital's streets and alleys.

Officials of the National Capital area council, which embraces the surrounding counties as well as the city, said the boys in each troop would survey their own neighborhoods to see that trash is properly deposited in trash cans and that unsightly conditions are called to the attention of those responsible.

Meanwhile, Health Officer George C. Ruhland pointed out the danger of permitting receptacles in backyards and alleys to gather water in which mosquitoes may breed. He said his inspectors are constantly on the lookout for this danger but need the cooperation of the home owner.

Another project launched yesterday by the scouts is a survey of their own troop meeting places. In many instances they cooperate with sponsoring institutions, such as churches in cleaning up weed patches and cutting lawns and removing unsightly piles of building material and paper.

Scoutmasters are also urging the scouts to try for the public health and civic merit badges, each of which requires cooperation with the municipal authorities in public health and sanitation projects.

The troops have been instructed to watch particularly for papers and trash on the streets and personally pick them up and place them in trash cans provided for their disposal.

The campaign to help clean the streets and alleys was inaugurated this week by a local citizens' group.

"We'll have more telescopes than we had last week," assured Stephen Nagy, president of the National Capital Amateur Astronomers Association, which sponsors the project. "And people won't have to wait so long."

Nagy apologized for the long waits suffered by last week's star gazers. He said his group had no idea so many enthusiasts would show up and only four telescopes were set up.

The show will start tonight at 8 o'clock—if the weather's clear.

Student Here on Sculpture Scholarship He Won For 'Dying Warrior,' Inspired by Conflict

Jean Thalinger would like to see the European war end today, even if it has indirectly brought him two important benefits—wider recognition as a sculptor and the trip to Washington he always wanted to make.

Thalinger, 24, is a student at the Washington University School of Fine Arts in St. Louis. Something of a rebel, believing that art should depict life's realities rather than conventional abstractions, he was inspired to do a small sculpture entitled "Dying Warrior" at the time of the Germans' break-through in northern France. The work is shown at right.

The plaster figure, an impressionistic interpretation of a mortally wounded soldier, already has won high praise from other artists. In Washington yesterday on a traveling scholarship awarded by his art school, Thalinger explained how the war led indirectly to that other benefit mentioned above—the trip here.

"Ordinarily winners of this particular scholarship, which is worth $800, travel in Europe. But the war made that impossible this year. So I am going around the country, visiting art galleries and getting ideas for future work.

Washington was his first stop out of St. Louis. Here he has made it a point to study particularly the painting and sculpture in the new Government buildings.

HEROES HONORED—Three firemen who won commendation for heroism were sworn in after promotions yesterday. Shown at the ceremonies are (from left) Fire Chief Porter, Lieut. Harvey J. Clark, promoted to captain; Sergt. Aubrey S. Calhoun, promoted to lieutenant; Private Sydney G. Carter, promoted to sergeant, and Capt. Carlisle Peterson, executive officer who swore in the men

Lieut. Harvey J. Clark of No. 7 Engine Company, whose rescue four years ago of a woman and her two small children from a blazing building gained for him the coveted silver medal of the Fire Department, yesterday was promoted to the rank of captain by the Commissioners.

Sergt. Aubrey Calhoun, of No. 19 Engine, was promoted to a lieutenant and Private Sydney G. Carter, of No. 2 Engine, to sergeant to fill Clark's promotion.

Twice decorated for bravery before he won the medal, Lieut. Clark entered the department on June 22, 1910, but resigned four years later to work for a railroad. He was reappointed April 1, 1922, and received a commendation the following year in the rescue of a boy during a flood in Benning, D. C.

On January 4, 1924, Lieut. Clark received honorable mention by the department for his commendable work during the previous year for which he was awarded a blue ribbon. He was made a sergeant May 1, 1928 and lieutenant March 11, 1933. His rescue of the woman and her two children took place December 28, 1936. Department records state Clark:

"Demonstrated courage and unusual good judgment when at a fire December 28, 1936, he had a ladder placed, ascended it through dense smoke and rescued a woman and her two small children from the second floor at 304 Rhode Island avenue northeast."

He is married and lives at 2835 Twenty-seventh street northeast. He is 52 years old, and is the father of a daughter.

Sergt. Calhoun, 42, was appointed in October, 1925, and made a sergeant March 1, 1934. He served in the U. S. Marines during the World War. He is married and lives at 174 North Carolina avenue southeast. He will be assigned to No. 7 Engine Company.

Private Carter, 32, former football star at Eastern High School, was appointed September 13, 1930. He received honorable mention for rescue work at a fire several years ago. He will be assigned to No. 17 Engine Company. Married, he lives at 227 Upshur street northwest.

Court Acts To Speed Up Alimony

Justice Laws Makes Ruling to Do Away With Stalling in Cases of Divorce

"Stalling" on back alimony payments will be a hard and dangerous thing in the District Court from now on.

Instead of being able to polish up their excuses for repeated court hearings, delinquent former husbands will find themselves automatically on the way to jail. And nothing but cash will keep them out; alibis won't work.

Justice Bolitha J. Laws, who is now presiding in the motions division of the court, where most alimony questions are heard, yesterday announced a change in procedure which tears one lot of "the law's delays" right out of the book.

Justice Laws has just completed a year's tour of duty presiding over the pretrial division, where he "streamlined" nearly 1,000 cases down to their essential issues, with a consequent enormous saving in actual trial time.

The course of a divorce action involving alimony has generally been like this: Mary Roe sues John Doe for a divorce, gets it and alimony of $15 a week. After a while, John Doe falls several weeks behind and Mary has him haled into court. He tells the judge that he has not been able to pay up, but solemnly promises that he will, if he is granted time. The hearing is recessed to see if he does. If he does not, he is brought back to court and the whole hearing is repeated. This sort of thing can go on for months and usually does.

But not any more. Under the new plan, the first hearing will be the last. After hearing John Doe's promises, the judge will say: "All right. You are behind in your alimony, so I must hold you in contempt, and I am signing an order commiting you to jail. However, if you can make the payments as you say you will, the order will not be carried out. It is up to you to pay the money, get a receipt and bring the receipt to the clerk of the court. If you don't, the marshals will come and get you and take you to jail."

This is described in legal language as "shifting to the defendant the burden of paying at the time stipulated and presenting to the court evidence that he has done so."

Policeman Beaten By 4 Men, Shoots One in the Arm

Wilbur M. Boyd, 18, 300 block Thirteenth street northeast, and Robert J. Snow, 19, 1100 block Montello avenue northeast, were accused of attacking McCarten early yesterday at Second street and Massachusetts avenue northeast.

McCarten suffered a slight concussion and cuts and bruises in a melee, which followed his attempt to place Boyd under arrest on charges of being drunk and disorderly. Treated at Casualty Hospital, the policeman was allowed to return to his home yesterday afternoon.

Boyd was shot in the arm. McCarten said he pulled his revolver in self-defense, when two unidentified men joined the fray, after he had been knocked to the ground.

Despite the beating he took, McCarten maintained the arrest of Boyd and Snow, and held them until he received help from the Ninth Precinct. The other two men escaped.

Virginian Returns From Royal Army To U. S. by a Ruse

Seattle, July 19 (AP).—Philip Stoegerer, 26, who was denied reentry into the United States from Canada on his return from service with the Canadian army abroad, turned up here last night after crossing the border by a ruse.

Stoegerer was discharged from the Canadian army because of injuries. An American board of inquiry in Montreal ruled that he had forfeited his United States citizenship by joining the Canadian army in February.

"I told immigration men I was a seaman, had come to Canada on a trip after signing off an American ship at Seatttle," he said. "To make my story sound convincing, inasmuch as I had no papers to prove my statements, I said I had been robbed in Vancouver of my money, ticket and papers.

"Believe me I was worried, but they finally let me through."

He said he would go to Washington and give himself up to the Department of Justice. Stoegerer is from Alexandria, Va.

Police Solve Embarrassing Thefts

Detective Chief Bernard W. Thompson was a pleased man last night. His men had under arrest the culprit who insisted on pilfering repeatedly a lunchroom just two doors from Police Headquarters.

The suspect, a 35-year-old carpenter, confessed entering the Courthouse Coffee Shop three times and said he was frightened away before he gained entrance on a fourth attempt. He denied any knowledge of the ten other times the eating place was ransacked.

Arrested July 12 in connection with the theft of $1,000 worth of Government bonds, the suspect maintained a four-day silence before he made a statement to detectives. He also implicated himself in nearly a score of other petty thefts.

Police recovered a large quantity of loot allegedly stolen by the man.

No charges had been placed against him last night and detectives said they intended to question him in regard to several recent safe burglaries.

Strike Ends On Defense Buildings

250 to Go Back To Work Monday; Negotiation to Settle Jurisdictional Row

Normal construction operations will be resumed Monday on the strike-harassed Social Security-Railroad Retirement buildings as the result of a truce reached late yesterday.

Signaling the end of a strike by union carpenters on the job, a conference of Federal, labor and contracting officials arrived at an agreement whereby the carpenters will return to work pending the arbitration of their dispute with plasterers' tenders over the building of wooden horses used by plasterers.

Although only 250 carpenters were involved in the strike, which was called Wednesday, nearly 2,000 other workers were made idle because of the interdependence of trades on a construction job.

According to terms of the truce, announced by Dr. John R. Steelman, chief of the Labor Department Conciliation Service, John P. Coyne, president of the A. F. of L. building trades department, will decide which trade has jurisdiction over construction of the plasterers' wooden horses or whether this work shall be divided between carpenters and plasterers' tenders.

"Credit for the settlement belongs to J. C. McCloskey, John Garvey and O. W. Blaier," Dr. Steelman declared. They are, respectively, the vice president of McCloskey & Co., general contractor for the twin buildings, for whose space the War Department and National Defense Advisory Commission are clamoring, and the international representatives of the building laborers' and carpenters' unions.

Also figuring in the truce, it was learned, was William A. (Big Bill) Hutcheson, the carpenters' international president, who gave his assent by long distance telephone.

Steelman "Happy"

"I am happy the trouble has been ironed out and am sure the building trades unions will make every effort to maintain an unbroken work schedule on these Government buildings," said Steelman, who was assisted in the negotiations by Howard T. Colvin.

Ordinarily the head of the A. F. of L. building trades department does not act as an arbiter in disputes affecting member unions. In this instance, however, it was agreed that he should review an A. F. of L. decision rendered in 1920 on jurisdiction over construction of wooden horses and trestles, make his own interpretation and announce his verdict, which is to be accepted by both sides.

Frank R. Howard, business agent of the carpenters' District council, said he will order his men back to work Monday with the understanding that no wooden horses shall be built pending Coyne's decision.

White Sox Snap Nats' Winning Streak, 9 to 1

Thornton Lee Only Allows Five Hits

Masterson, Krakky Routed; Travis' Consecutive Hitting Streak Broken

By Shirley Povich.
Post Staff Writer

Among the prostrations yesterday was the Nats' five-game winning streak. It succumbed to the torrid pitching of Thornton Lee, of the White Sox, in full view of 10,000 Ladies' Day guests and customers. The Nats weren't exactly nosed out. They were convincingly licked, 9 to 1.

With the thermometer registering 101, the left-handed Lee paradoxically cooled the Nats off. He yielded only five hits—four of them singles—and was cheated of a shutout by a freak-hopping ground ball that produced Washington's only run of the game.

Among the casualties was Cecil Travis' 1-game hitting streak. Back in the line-up after a week's convalescence, Travis didn't get a ball out of the infield against the White Sox southpaw until his last time at bat, when he produced a weak fly to center.

Sox Stage Hit Wave

The White Sox won the ball game with a hit wave against Walter Masterson and Joe Krakauskas, chiefly the latter. Whatever ideas the Nats had of staging another one of their recent late-inning uprisings vanished with the appearance of Krakauskas in the eighth inning. Krakky escaped with his life, but he was cuffed around brutally.

Six of their nine runs the White Sox packed into that eighth to place the ball game beyond reclaim. However, those last six runs were so much persiflage, or words to that effect. With Lee pitching the way he was, the Nats were a gone gang.

The Nats' winning streak was scuttled chiefly by Lee, but secondarily by chunky Taft Wright, their former pal, who is now hitting a hot .356 for Chicago. Wright delivered a double to left in the fourth inning that scored two runs and obliterated Washington's 1-0 lead.

Nats Score Lone Run

Back in the second inning, the Nats hopped in front with a cheap run. Buddy Myer singled to center with two out, stole second and romped home when Pofahl's hard grounder bounced crazily over Second Baseman Skeeter Webb's shoulder and evolved as a freak two-bagger.

That was the only run the Nats could stir up. Waller singled in the third with two out and was caught stealing. They made only two hits in the last six innings—Masterson's tainted infield single with two out in the fifth, and Pofahl's single to center in the seventh.

In that seventh, with the White Six leading only 3-1, the Nats made some futile gestures toward getting back into the ball game. With one out, Myer was safe when Lee failed to step on first after taking a throw from Kuhel, and Pofahl put the tying run on base with a single to center. But Lee bore down at that point, causing Ferrell to line out to Solters and Pinch Hitter Welaj to lift a harmless fly to the same guy.

Kreevich Launches Attack

Mike Kreevich launched the third-inning assault on Masterson with a single to center and took second on a wild pitch. Whereupon Masterson lost his control, his effectiveness and his 1-0 lead. He walked Kuhel, caused Solters to hit into a force play and then pitched the fateful two-bagger to Wright which drove two Sox home. A third scored when Appling dropped a double into short left.

The assault on Krakky in the eighth was murderous. Kreevich touched it off with a triple to the wall in left center and scored when Travis bobbled Case's throw to the infield. Umpire Cal Hubbard ran interference for the ball and successfully blocked Travis from the play. Krakky then walked Kuhel and Solters, who engineered a double steal while Wright was striking out.

Last District Player Bows At Baltimore

Margo Lee, Partner Lose Doubles; Don McNeill, Alice Marble Enter Final Rounds

By Jack Munhall
A Staff Correspondent

Baltimore Country Club, July 19. Margo Lee, youthful Washingtonian, and Emily Lincoln, her first-time partner from Boston, found the superior experience and better net attack of Mary Hardwick and Valerie Scott too much to overcome here today and were eliminated in the doubles semifinals of the Maryland State Lawn Tennis championships.

While 3,500 fans, the largest crowd of the tournament to date, sweltered in a muggy heat that at times sent the thermometer soaring to 100 degrees, Misses Lee and Lincoln bowed, 6—2, 9—7, to the first ranked foreign team, and thus was eliminated the last remaining District of Columbia player.

Upset Is Recorded

Meantime, men's and women's singles reached the final round, with the upset of the second-seeded Welby Van Horn by Jack Kramer standing as the day's only upset. Sulking in the final set and tossing away two games after the umpire had called the last of four foot faults against him, the temperamental Los Angeles 19-year-old succumbed, 8—10, 6—4, 6—4, 6—2.

Kramer's opponent in the men's finals tomorrow will be top-seeded Don McNeill, of Kenyon College, Oklahoma City, who continued to roll along unextended with a straight set victory over Elwood Cooke, Chicago veteran, 6—3, 6—4, 7—5.

Statuesque Alice Marble, queen of American net women, kept pace with McNeill by winning her fourth successive match in straight sets, a 6—3, 7—5, triumph over Valerie Scott, second-seeded foreign contender.

Pauline Betz Wins

Also gaining the women's singles finals was Pauline Betz, eighth-ranking player of the Nation and fourth seeded in the tournament, who rallied sharply to turn back Mary Hardwick, 4—6, 6—0, 6—2.

Miss Marble, undefeated in tournament singles competition since Helen Jacobs defeated her at Wimbledon in the summer of 1938, is

4 Horsemen Are Suspended In 'Dope' Case

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, July 19.—Four horsemen were suspended today after the Maryland Racing Commission investigated a report that Single Ply, winner of the second race at Hagerstown last Friday, had been stimulated by a narcotic.

Chester F. Hockley, commission chairman, said William G. Whitney, who was listed as the trainer of Single Ply, had been suspended for 60 days; W. G. Marion was ruled off the turf indefinitely, and two grooms, Allen Williams and W. Sheppard, were denied the privleges of Maryland tracks for 60 days.

"We (the commission) believe that Whitney, who saddled Single Ply for Marion, was unaware that the horse had been stimulated," Hockley said. "We have exonerated him of all blame, but believe that a 60-day suspension is justified by his carelessnes of not giving proper attention before the race."

Rushing New Yorkers Sweep Series, Score 7 Runs in First Inning of Rout, Hit Four Homers

By the Associated Press

New York, July 19.—The roar of the onrushing Yankee machine sounded louder and louder today as the champions pulverized the Cleveland Indians, 15 to 6, to sweep a three-game series with the erstwhile league leaders.

Clubbing the ball as of old, the Yanks assaulted four Cleveland flingers for 13 hits, including four home runs, two of them by First Baseman Babe Dahlgren. Seven runs off Lefty Al Smith and Joe Dobson in the opening frame settled the issue.

The victory, however, was not without its cost. Lefty Gomez, who started for the Yanks and was pitching with fair success, caught a terrific drive off Roy Weatherly's bat on the heel of his hurling hand in the fourth inning and was painfully injured. It is doubtful if the veteran will pitch again for several weeks.

The Indians got all five of their runs on two mighty drives. Hal Trosky pounded his ninteenth home run of the season off Gomez with two aboard in the third, and in the next inning Boudreau slammed a triple off Johnny Murphy with two on. Murphy set the Tribe down with three scattered hits the rest of the way.

Buddy Rosar, second string catcher, led the Yankees attack with a single, a double, a triple and a home run in his first four times at bat.

The way they fell upon Smith in the first inning was brutal. A home run by Joe Gordon, triples by Rosar and Buster Mills and Henrich's double propelled six runs across the plate before Oscar Vitt could get Smith out of there. Dahlgren, first man to face Dobson, slapped one into the stands for the seventh run of the inning. Mills cleaned the sasks with a double in the second inning, and after that the crowd of nearly 19,000 practically lost interest.

Jacobs Plans Return Match Sept. 27

Commission Clears Way for Welters To Get Money; Mead Suspended

By the Associated Press

New York, July 19.—The State Athletic Commission cleared the way today for Henry Armstrong and Lew Jenkins to get paid for their fight Tuesday night, and Promotor Mike Jacobs immediately announced plans for a return match between the two in Madison Square Garden September 27.

The commission, which had held up the fighters' purses without giving any reason yesterday, cleared up the "mystery," and then soothed its ruffled dignity by pinning a 60-day suspension on Eddie Mead, Armstrong's manager, for an unimportant row over hand bandages a few minutes before Tuesday's bout started.

Wanted Forfeit Money Posted

The commission explained that they wanted Welterweight Boss Armstrong and Lightweight Champion Jenkins to post forfeits of $2,000 and $1,500, respectively, to make the next defenses of their titles in this State. Promoter Jacobs immediately returned to his office and mailed the forfeit money to the fistic fathers. The commissioners, after weighty thought, decided Armstrong must fight for his 147-pound crown "on or about" October 26 and Jenkins must put his

Charley Grimm Offers to Aid Cubs as Injuries Hit 2 Players

Former First Sacker And Manager Claims He Would Help Club

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 19.—Charley Grimm, former first baseman and manager of the Chicago Cubs, offered to come to the aid of the club today.

Grimm's offer to play (he said he was serious) came when the Cubs found themselves without a first baseman. An examination of Phil Cavarretta's injured right foot revealed he had suffered a fracture and will be out of the line-up indefinitely. Glen Russell is recovering from a recent appendectomy. Hank Lieber, an outfielder, took over the position.

"I know I can be of help," said 39-year-old Grimm who has been a radio commentator since start of the 1939 season. "I can play first base until the Cubs get some other fellow and am physically fit since I have been working out with the White Sox when they are at home."

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

You'll notice, please, that among the leading hitters in the American League is Washington's Cecil Travis. And it is more than a coincidence. Only when Travis isn't among the league's top hitters is there any occasion for surprise. The gangling Georgian seemingly belongs in the loftier circles of American League batting.

POVICH

Bucky Harris, appreciating the more easily Travis' batting talents perhaps because he never hit .300 himself, calls the Georgia boy one of the fine natural hitters in baseball. That's what he means when he says that Travis "can hit in the dark."

Currently Travis is hitting for a highly respectable .345. In only one of the seven seasons he has been with the Nats has the Georgia lad failed to hit as much as .300. That was last year when he was plagued by influenza and weakened to the point that it was an effort for him to swing his stick.

We remember the first day Travis ever wore a Washington uniform. He was called up from Chattanooga at the fag end of the 1934 season. He lashed out a hit to leftfield in his first time at bat, against a Cleveland pitcher. Five straight hits—all to leftfield—rattled off his bat that day, and no rookie ever made a more impressive debut.

But there was no rush to acclaim Travis as a fine hitter. Those hits to leftfield were seemingly unnatural for a lefthanded batter. But he has been getting a good share of his hits to leftfield ever since. However, he has blossomed as something of a problem child to the league's outfielders. When he noted their practice of shading him to left, he was able to hit to center and right, and now they play him as a straight-away hitter.

There isn't much power in Travis' stroke, save when he takes a toe hold and strives for extra distance. Then he knocks it over the heads of any outfielders who are playing him too close. But he's too smart a hitter to sacrifice the accuracy of his stroke for distance. He's content to meet the ball, and because he is a line drive hitter he gets his full share of hits.

For some years now there have been nasty reflections cast on Travis' ability to hit in the clutch—to drive runs across the plate—and the fact is that he has been none too potent in that direction. But this is the season when with a fair break in the luck he would have proved himself. His failure with men on bases this year has been due only to the fact that his drives have been the forerunners of spectacular fielding plays. On Nats' last Western trip, Travis belted the daylights out of the ball with men on bases but was consistently robbed of hits. "Who'll rob him this time" was the press box refrain when Travis came to bat.

The man most unconscious of the fact that Travis had a consecutive-game hitting streak of 18 was probably the Georgia boy himself. Like every other ball player, he prizes his hits, but unlike most of them he keeps no strict tab on his own average. He simply goes to the plate, does his best, and lets it go at that.

For the past few seasons Manager Bucky Harris has attempted to convert Travis into a pull hitter in an effort to get Travis' hits into rightfield where they do the most good, but Harris has given up that notion. He now permits Travis to swing as he likes, and his reward is that .345 average, and a .345 hitter to any field never harmed any ball club.

One of the reasons that Travis is a fine hitter is that he is seemingly fearless at the plate where skulls are cracked and ball players sometimes killed. Pitchers don't bother to brush him off any more. Sending him into the dirt doesn't help. He gets up and continues to crowd the plate as if nothing happened. Thornton Lee, of the Indians, once banged him on the skull with a pitch and put him in a hospital for three weeks. When Travis recovered, the first pitcher he faced was Lee. He tripled on the first pitch.

Veteran Tommy Bridges Hurls Fine Ball as Leaders Continue March; Denny Galehouse Is Routed

By the Associated Press

Boston, July 19 (AP).—Detroit's resurgent Tigers consolidated their grip on the American League's top rung today by shutting out the Boston Red Sox, 4-0, behind the fine curve-ball pitching of Veteran Tommy Bridges.

That righthander kept seven Boston hits well scattered as his teammates gained their winning margin by belting Starter Denny Galehouse for singles, and a home run during the second and third frames.

Rudy York opened a two-run barrage in the second inning and his single was duplicated by Ralph Kress and Birdie Tebbetts to provide the first run. Bridges then forced Tebbetts and Kress scored on the play. In the third inning, after Barney McCosky hit safely and stole second, York belted his thirteenth homer of the season over the left-center wall.

Galehouse lasted until the end of the fifth, and during the last four frames Rookie Alex Mustaikis held the Tigers to one hit. Bridges had five strikeouts, including Manager Joe Croning and Jimmy Foxx, back after a four days' layoff, who took called strikes with runners in scoring position.

Albert York Named Coach Of Va. Boxing

Special Dispatch to The Post

Charlottesville, Va., July 19.—Albert T. York, of this city, assistant coach of boxing at the University of Virginia for the past 8 years, has been named head coach of that sport to succeed the late John S. (Johnny) LaRowe, whose death in May, came shortly after his nineteenth season of coaching Virginia boxing teams, dating back to the start of intercollegiate competition here in 1922.

York is an alumnus of the class of 1927 at the university. He was one of the finest college middleweight boxers of his time and held the team captaincy, as well as the student presidency of the college. He is himself a veteran in coaching circles, having served continuously as first assistant to LaRowe since he returned here to enter business in 1932.

Another coaching appointment announced by Norton Pritchett, director of athletics at the university, is that of Ralph Heikkinen, who becomes chief line coach on the football staff. He will succeed Edward R. (Butch) Slaughter, line coach since 1931, who has been assigned to a post in the physical education department.

Tennis Stars In Exhibition

Washington tennis fans, who were not fortunate enough to see the outstanding stars who have been playing this week at Baltimore, will have big-league competition brought to them tomorrow.

An exhibition program, scheduled to start at 2:30 o'clock on the courts at Sixteenth and Kennedy streets northwest, will present Mary Hardwick, internationally known English player; Gil Hunt and Margo Lee, of this city; Bryan (Bitsy) Grant, of Atlanta, and possibly Gardnar Mulloy, of Coral Gables, Fla., and Don McNeill, of Oklahoma City, Okla.

The tentative plans are to stage one-set singles matches between Miss Lee, City of Washington champion, and Miss Hardwick, who was the top seeded foreign woman player in the Maryland State and Middle Atlantic tournament in Baltimore this week, and Hunt and Grant. Grant ranks fifth among the Nation's men players, and Hunt ninth.

Gardner Mulloy still at the University of Miami, is the Nation's No. 8 player, with the outlook of being in the first five this year.

Bill McDowell Fights Here

Wild Bill McDowell, two-time conqueror of Phil Furr, was signed yesterday for a ten-round battle with Holman Williams, world's third ranking welterweight, July 29 at Griffith Stadium, Matchmaker Gabe Menendez announced yesterday.

Heavyweight Champion Joe Louis will come in to second Williams, his colored protege, and will referee one of the six-round preliminaries.

Menendez returned yesterday from New York, where he has been conferring with Bill Daley, manager of McDowell and Pat Comiskey, Izzy Jannazzo, who's ranked fifth among the 147-pounder, had been considered as an opponent for Williams, but a last-minute demand for a $1,500 guarantee led Gabe to seek out Daley and McDowell.

The curley-haired Texas lad who almost knocked out Cocoa Kid in the final round of their fight here recently in which he took the worst of the business for nine rounds is a hard hitter and a crowd-pleasing type of battler.

Spanish Spear Is Double Winner at Rappahannock Horse Show

Event to Continue Today With D. C. Contingent's Horses Performing

By Anne Hagner

Washington, Va., July 19.—His jumping performances improving in every show, Mrs. D. N. Lee's Spanish Spear emerged from the opening session of the Rappahannock County Horse Show near here, as the only double winner of the day's doings.

The striking chestnut, chosen as Upperville's 3-year-old champion last month, won both the green hunters and hunter hacks events with Aubrey Fishback aboard to turn back some of the hunt country's classiest competition.

Although the District of Columbia's contingent of open jumpers will not commence duty until tomorrow, the hunter classes today proved interesting to Washington spectators as Betty Couzens' Jag, ridden by Alex Calvert, won the class for 3 and 4 year olds, over fences, and Miss Couzens rode her own Repulsion to victory over the outside course in the lightweight hunters event.

Hi Ho Injured

Sad blow to the District's hopes was the injury last night to Lisbeth Stieg's Hi-Ho, who hurt her hip while en route to the show grounds in a trailer. However, Miss Stieg will not be grounded, as she is scheduled to have the mount of Lieut. Fred Hughes, jr's. Black Caddy, while his owner is now stationed at Fort Belvoir.

Aside from Spanish Spear's winnings, most notable victory today came when Robert S. Waters' Royalty II with Edward Barker up, turned in a particularly smooth round over Rappahannock's diabolic outside course to take the Hunters' Class over Mrs. George Watts Hill's highly regarded Inky, Mrs. Aistin Jennings' Gay Blade, and Miss Couzens' Repulsion. Waters' big bay halfbred, a grandson of Man o'War, was champion at this show last year, and many onlookers predict that he is due to make a repeat triumph for his Johnstown (Pa.) owner.

Meanwhile, the big stables were noticeably out of the winners' circle as Mrs. Hill's combine could do no better than seconds with Inky and Baikonian, and Mrs. Altemus Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh, and U. S. Randle were left almost completely out of the ribbons with their extensive hunter strings.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Haggin Perry's two newly acquired mounts, Huntley Glen and Village Miss, each won a class as Huntley Glen took the open hunters, with her owner up, and Village Miss won the brood mare's event over Inky.

Parker, Kovacs Net Winners

By the Associated Press

New York, July 19.—Frankie Kovacs, of Oakland, Calif., who plays tennis for the laughs, and Frankie Parker, the Pasadena, Calif., pokerface, reached the semifinals of the Eastern clay court tennis championships today.

Kovacs overcame Bill Umstaedter, of Milburn, N. J., 6—3, 6—3, 3—6, 6—1, while Parker defeated Joe Fishbach, of New York, 6—0, 5—7, 6—2, 6—3.

Neither was seriously pressed. Parker went about his task methodically, but Kovacs, who is disputing Bobby Riggs' title as "clow prince" of tennis, trotted out most of his bag of comedy tricks en route to his triumph.

Australian Leading In Chicago Golf Play

Big Jim Ferrier Shoots Six Under Par 66 In Opening Round of Chicago Championship; Johnny Revolta Close Behind Leader

By the Associated Press

Chicago, July 19.—A husky star from "down under"—Big Jim Ferrier, of Australia—threw the heaviest punch today as a surprisingly strong amateur contingent gave the professionals a rousing battle in the opening round of the $5,000 Chicago Open golf championship.

Ferrier, who writes for a Sydney newspaper, went around Tam O'Shanter's tree-lined layout in 66 strokes, 6 under par—a brilliant performance in a day which saw eight amateurs fight their way into the par or under bracket as numerous professionals slipped over regulation figures.

Revolta Cards 67

A stroke off the pace was Johnny Revolta, veteran professional from Evanston, Ill., who went out in 32 and came home in 35 for a 5 under par 67. Willie Turnesa, former national amateur champion from Elmsford N. Y., had identical nines of 34 for a 68, which tied the effort of Dick Metz., Chicago professional, while three other pros tied at 69—Ed Oliver, of Hornell, N. Y., and Ralph Guldahl and Johnny Bulla, of Chicago.

Ed Wysowski, Kewanee, Ill., had a two-under-par 70, just a shot under three amateurs, George Dawson, of Chicago; Alex Welsh, of Rockford, Ill., and Tom Sheehan, of Detroit. Three amateurs were among the players who equalled par of 36-36—72. They were Wilford Wehrle, of the home club; Art Andrews, of Peoria, who had a double-eagle two on the par five fifteenth as he sank a 200-yard iron shot, and Jack Horner, of Chicago.

Open Champ Has 73

Lawson Little, the National Open champion, had a one-over-par 73, as did Sam Snead and Ben Hogan, two of the brightest stars of the game's professional camp. Gene Sarazen, who tied Little for the open crown at Cleveland and then lost it in a play-off, came in with a 74, as did such veteran performers as Horton Smith and Harry Cooper.

Ellsworth Vines, former world amateur and professional tennis champion from Los Angeles, had a 77.

Willie Herbert To Defend Net Crown Today

Willie O'Steen Herbert will defend her singles title against Mrs. Margaret Keever starting at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon on the Reservoir courts at Sixteenth and Kennedy streets northwest. Following this encounter and not later than 3:30 o'clock, Allie Ritzenberg and Ray Stocklinski will renew their annual battle for the men's singles title.

—With CONSIDINE

CONSIDINE

Goshen, N. Y., July 19.—The trotters have come back to this bucolic paradise of fat, green rolling hills, white fences and stuffed red barns. So have the old men of the trotting game, with their clucking tongues, strange goggles and hats, and their curious colored coats. The rhythmic clop-clop of hooves on the hard dirt track blends with the whirr of the sulky wheel and fuses with the sounds of the peacful countryside and the murmur of the good people who sit in the wooden grandstands and witness this annual throwback to another era.

Beneath the stands at the ancient historic track, and at the kite-shaped good time track, has been built the abracadabra which goes with pari-mutuel racing. There are electric odds boards set in the infields, in the slanting shade of great trees which have looked down on a hundred years of peaceful sameness.

The auction pool is gone and so are the bookies—but Goshen remains the same. And by the "same" we mean something that doesn't lend itself to stiff adjectives, nouns and verbs. This is the rich, proud rural America that a lot of us are beginning to cherish for the first time.

Harness racing was born of a native trait. There was always the love of a good horse, of course. But in the days when the country was being settled and we were building what has become the last refuge of human rights there wasn't much time for sport. A man had his horse—preferably one which could work in the field and also pull a carriage to church. Harness racing evolved from impromptu races . . . Two carriages along a country road, a boast about the prowess of one of the horses, a counter boast, and a stirring race to the bend in the road . . . Wooden wheels protesting, the wind whistling through beards and grimly held petticoats, and then the cheerful plans for a return race, soon.

"Gave up harness racing in '87, after I won the Chamber of Commerce Cup, outside of Detroit," he cackled. "Built a lot of tracks after that. I'm building that new one over at Roosevelt Raceway. Lemme see, I built the Good Time Track in 1901. Had to make it three-cornered on account of my land.

"I bought this historic track in '87. Darn if they didn't want to make building lots out of it. Would've been shameful. Would've hurt trotting.

"The game changes all the time. We have a lot more officials these days, and a lot of doo-dads like this new-fangled starting device. Blazes, I scored 23 times in a single heat, once. (A score is a false start.) Don't see many old drivers in the game any more. Lacey there, Charley Lacey, must be the oldest. And he's only a little over 60. Pop Geers was still going strong when he was 75, when he had that bad accident. Animal's changing too. Took me two years once to teach a colt to pace. Now they've been bred and inbred so much that they practically do it naturally. But it's still the greatest game in the world."

The Man of the Month contest is sponsored jointly by The Washington Post and Station WJSV. Following each of the Nats' games, Arch McDonald will award points to Washington players as he deems performances merit. The Man of the Month will be presented with a $50 merchandise order by The Post.

Jimmy Pofahl was the outstanding individual among the Nats yesterday in the defeat by the White Sox, and makes the largest gain in the race for Man of the Month honors.

To Pofahl, five points because he made two of the Nats' four hits and drove in their only run.

To Buddy Myer, four points, because he made a hit, stole second and scored. That is all.

Mid-Atlantic Pros Battle for 4 Places In P. G. A. Tourney

District, Maryland and Virginia professionals will play for four places to the National P. G. A. championship at Hershey, Pa., in the Middle Atlantic sectional qualifying rounds next Friday, July 26, over the Five Farms course of the Baltimore Country Club.

The awarding of four places to this sector is an increase of one over last year when Rut Coffee, Cliff Spencer and Mel Shorey qualified locally for the Nationals at Pomonok. Places are based on the number of paid up members in the association.

John Flattery, Terra Mariae Club pro, is accepting entries for the trial rounds so that pairings can be made by Thursday. Most of the professionals are expected to test the course in practice rounds Thursday.

Reliance Wins Industrial Game

Reliance Life broke into the winning column for the first time in 16 games in The Washington Post-Industrial League yesterday by nosing out Russell Motors, 9 to 8, on the Ellipse.

The life insurance nine went through the first half—12 games—with 10 defeats and 2 ties and until yesterday had been unable to get anywhere in the second half. Even so, victory came the hard way and a Russell run in the last half of the ninth of a game which saw the Russell line-up undergo quite a juggling to achieve balance almost gummed the works for the Reliance club.

The Motormen hit Pitcher McGinnis 12 times, while the winners could get but 10 hits off Pitchers Beckett and Kloak. For Russell, McMenniman played third base and shortstop, Brown was in centerfield and at third base, Beckett played leftfield and pitched and Kloak did the same.

The Reliance club trailed, 6-2, midway of the game, but came back with a determined drive for their first victory.

Bees' Timely Hitting Beats Redlegs, 8-7

Boston Is Outhit but Bunches Blows to Turn Back Leaders

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, July 19.—Outhit, 14 to 8, Boston's Bees nevertheless bunched four safeties with two Cincinnati errors in the seventh inning today to defeat first-place Reds, 8 to 7.

Four Cincinnati pitchers gave the best they had before a ladies' day crowd of 14,790, but it wasn't good enough to overcome shortstop Eddie Joost's right arm in the crucial frame.

However, the Reds remained three games ahead of Brooklyn, thanks to Chicago's 11-to-4 victory over the Dodgers.

Held to four hits and a single run through six frames, the Bees filled the bases in the seventh on a walk and two singles. Milt Shoffner replaced Starter Gene Thompson. But Ernie Lombardi juggled Joost's return of Warstler's grounder and Eddie Miller scored. Sebie Sisti walked to force in Alban Glossop.

Then Joost threw Buddy Hassett's grounder far beyond Lombardi's reach and Al Masi, Hal Warstler and Sisti scored. Johnny Cooney tripled to tally Hassett, Joe Beggs, the third of the four Red Hurlers, allowed Miller to single, scoring Cooney and clinching victory No. 6 for Starter Joe Sullivan.

The Reds got away to a two-run lead in the first on a walk, the first of Frank McCormick's three hits, a single, and Lombardi's double and tallied another in the fifth. They added three in the seventh and one in the eighth.

Double Back Captures Hagerstown Purse in Blanket Finish

Victor Pays $6.60 Price; Salian Second

Jockey Martinez Puts Up Good Ride on Winner; Time Her, Third

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent

Hagerstown, Md., July 19.—Double Back, a filly who has performed with some of the best handicap horses in the country, went slumming in a class way today, but had to be lucky to win. The daughter of Haste carried the colors of W. Eichorn to victory in the Alexander Hotel Purse and scored by a short neck. J. Savarez's Salian was second in the blanket finish a head in advance of J. T. Harris' Time Her, the favorite, in the field of eight going 5 furlongs.

Double Back won only because the front runners in the group ran out entering the stretch, opening the gate to the $3,000 filly. Jockey A. F. Martinez, the day's riding hero, made the most of the opportunity offered, however.

The crowd of 6,000 had some respect for Double Back's record, but they gave the chief backing to Time Her. Double Back paid $6.60 and was clocked in the ordinary 5-furlong time of 1:04 3-5.

Time Her did the expected by going to the front in the opening furlong. She had Way Out dogging her on the outside. Salian and Double Back were close but did not appear to be headed anywhere in particular when Time Her and Way Out opened a gap. But approaching the final turn, Time Her ran straight ahead with Jockey Buddy Root unable to bank her. She carried Way Out wide with her. It was at this point that Salian and Double Back saved the ground that put them into serious contention. In the final drive, Double Back had a bit too much on the ball for Salian.

Trainer Ned Gaines, who saddled Double Back, also sent an expensive horse after a purse in the first race and then watched Ophelia II outclass seven rivals. The 2-year-old, third in a Delaware Park race, was so good that she was knocked sideways leaving the gate and went on to win in hand.

Jockey Martinez rode Ophelia II and she paid $3. Those who coupled her with Bank Note, winner of the second race, took down a $22.70 pay off in the daily double. Bank Note defeated maiden 3-year-olds and paid an individual mutuel of $10.80.

Selections at Hagerstown

Dear Al:

Getaway day in these parts. Racing Secretary Eddie Brennan and General Manager Harold Bester offer their final program and have a well-rounded card. With long "also eligible" lists, limit fields are assured. The day's sport is topped by the Hanecock Handicap at a mile and a sixteenth, but for my money, the most interesting event will be the Ligonier Purse, over a marathon route of 2 miles and a sixteenth (honest). This is the longest race ever run over this track. Joe Stevens, jr., has ordered three extra regiments of hot dogs in anticipation of a crowd that will surpass last Saturday's record gathering. Happy Gordon, the veteran outrider, celebrated his fiftieth birthday yesterday. Don't forget the auction today of horses in training. Action starts in the paddock at 1 p. m. It looks as though somebody was right when they told me that Ophilia II was the best thing of the meeting. Was knocked, blocked, bumped and dumped in the opening 25 yards and had enough "oomph" to win by five lengths well in hand. Remember, no racing at Bel Air on Monday and Tuesday. Jockey Leon Garret can't seem to have any luck. He has been getting the long shots close, but seems to have developed a second-place complex. He hasn't ridden a winner since he left Wheeling. Alan (I've got the best looking 2-year-old in Maryland) Clarke was a visitor yesterday. Understand Challedon is going to race on the West Coast a week from today. I'd like to see that battle, boss. Frank Colley, custodian of the claiming box, caught a couple of claims the other day and was handling the box like it was a red hot coal. First time he has had any work at the meeting. See you on the rail. BILL.

First race—The ancient Frederick seems to have a field built to order for him in the day's opener. He can handle all the eligibles. Cream Cheese and Chide probably will chase him to the wire. On reserve list, Happy Miracle and Adhelmar and Counora would be dangerous if sent postward.

Second race—Quick Vine downed good ones at the other town. May escape trouble from that outside post position and I'm going to string along. The Manfuso-Johnston entry of Accidental and Nay Nay is formidable and will be in the thick of contention. Mud would aid Beacon Queen.

Third race—Never Home seems best of the sprinters gathered for this event. Has done about everything asked. Dabs ran out in that last and I expect the Frost ways and means committee to put on the right equipment. Paper Girl, under good handling, would be close.

Fourth race—Extra Good galloped around a field last out and seems to be at top form. Belongs with these. Kissin Kid likes the track and that last was encouraging. Black Demon and Dacotah are good ones on the reserve list.

Fifth race—Summer Stock won at a shorter route, but showed me that we may expect a good race over a distance of ground. I'm going to string along. Kenner is in with a feather and could surprise. West Sea and Blind Brook are dangerous.

Sixth race—Pin Hooker may not like this marathon route, but I'm going to take my chances. Should do a lot of closing. Tee Off holds the long-distance record at Charles Town. Disraeli is good now, but may not go this far.

Seventh race—Clymene should take this purse if she can wiggle off the also eligible list. The Bond entry of Sedate and Pencader promises to be prominent. Lapis is my long shot with a chance.

Best bet—Summer Stock.

Foreign Price Of Gold Shows Steady Slump

'Goldless Economy' Fears Widen in Wake Of Nazi Conquests

By the Associated Press

Zurich, Switzerland, July 19.—International bankers are watching the price of what gold Europe still holds on this side of the Atlantic sag steadily as fears of totalitarian "goldless economy" widen in the wake of German conquests.

Most bankers of Switzerland, the principal continental banking center for Europe throughout the war, said such fears did not seem valid, but held them responsible for the unsteadying liquidation of hoardings and the drop in gold price of bank notes.

The Swiss 20-franc goldpiece (containing 5.8064 grams of gold) has dropped from 33 francs ($7.59) just after invasion of the Netherlands to latest quotations of 27 francs ($6.21). The price before the war was 30 francs ($6.90.)

In recent German-Swiss bank clearings, the Swiss National Bank has offered payments in gold, but these were refused. Germany, unable to send the gold overseas for purchases, preferred to take Swiss manufactured goods.

After the invasion of the low countries many persons bought gold to hoard, fearing Switzerland might become involved. With that scare over they have been unloading the gold for negotiable bank notes.

The Swiss National Bank which holds more than $480,000,000 for coverage of notes is refusing to buy more gold because it would be required to issue more notes.

(The decline in the Swiss 20-franc goldpiece was interpreted in some New York banking circles as the result of local conditions in Switzerland, rather than any general loss of faith in gold in Europe.)

(Private hoarders, banking sources said, may have found it harder to dispose of old gold coins because of the difficulty of shipping metal out of the country since the German conquest of France and the closing of the Mediterranean to shipping.)

(As understood in New York banking quarters dealing in Swiss exchange, the Swiss National Bank has been buying bar gold freely within a specified price range but has had certain restrictions on the purchase of coins.)

(Wall Street, like other financial centers, has been discussing the future of gold under such totalitarian economies as have risen in Europe but opinion has been divided as to whether the new set-ups would be able to dispense with the metal, at least in settling international balances.)

(The United States, offering $35 an ounce, has been the chief market for gold in recent years. As long as the metal can be shipped here, one banker said, it probably will continue to have a high value abroad, too.)

Shut Hot-Mill Plant Sold to Duquesne Corp.

Greensburg, Pa., July 19 (AP).—Carnegie-Illinois Steel Corporation has sold its abandoned hot-mill plant at Monessen, Pa., to the Duquesne Corporation, affiliate of the Pittsburgh Steel Co., recording of the deed disclosed today.

While the amount of the transaction was not made known, revenue stamps affixed to the deed indicated approximately $165,000 was involved.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, July 19 (AP).—Led by the 1940 corn future delivery, which advanced more than 2 cents a bushel, grain prices today rose sharply just before Hitler launched his "peace bid" but then reacted fractionally from the day's best levels.

Pit brokers were not certain how much if any of the bullish movement of values could be attributed to trade interpretation of the first section of the Hitler speech, but most observers believed hot weather over the corn and wheat belts and purchasing of previous short sellers were the principal factors. The upturn got under way before Hitler began speaking and the market closed before he finished.

Wheat showed net gains of as much as 1½ cents at one time but closed ⅛@1 cent higher than yesterday, July 74⅛@74¼, September 74⅛@74⅝. Corn was up as much as 1⅛@2⅜ but closed ½@2½ net higher, July 63, September 60@60¼, December 56-@56½. Oats gained ⅛@⅜; rye 1⅛@1⅜, and lard 2@5 cents.

Some of the buying of wheat came from mills and hedging in connection with the diminished new crop movement was lighter.

Temperature readings in the Northwest yesterday ranged from 57 to 107 degrees and there were no signs of relief except the possibility of partly cloudy weather with scattered showers. Fair weather was predicted for the heart of the corn belt.

December corn rose to 58¾ cents at one stage. Much of this strength was attributed to the fact that the conract has been quoted at an abnormal discount below cash grain prices, which are high because of the country holding policy. No. 2 yellow corn sold as high as 65¾.

Kansas City July corn soared almost 4 cents at one stage and closed 2¼ net higher at 69, or 1¾ over the price of July wheat there.

Other gains followed the upturn. Hedging of rye had less effect than in recent sessions.

Domestic Use Of Scrap Steel Leaps in June

14% Gain Recorded As Exports Show Decline in Half

By the Associated Press

Canada to Spend $11,000,000 for Chemical Plant

Ottawa, July 19 (AP).—Construction will begin immediately "somewhere in Ontario" on a major plant engaged in making chemicals for Canada's explosive manufacturing program, says an announcement by C. D. Howe, munitions minister.

The plant, to cost approximately $11,000,000, will be built on British account under the aegis of the department of munitions and supply, which will supervise construction and co-ordinate operations with the remainder of the Canadian explosives program.

New York, July 19 (AP).—Buying at retail stores this week, though seasonally slow, averaged 4 to 11 per cent above a year ago for the country as a whole, Dun & Bradstreet reported today.

Last week retail sales were 3 to 8 per cent above the corresponding 1939 period.

"Summer dullness prevailed, and total volume reached the year's low point, but activity was still enough better than a year ago to improve the year-to-year comparisons," the credit agency said. "Increased pay rolls in industrial districts continued to stimulate purchasing in these sections, while clearances of summer stocks met with good response."

Rubber Transit Delayed

Singapore, July 19 (AP).—Some 8,000 tons of rubber destined for the United States are held up in French Indo-China ports because of a lack of ships, businessmen arriving here reported today.

Bar Politics in Relations With Workers, Bosses Told

By Merryle Stanley Rukeyser
Economic Commentator

In their communications to employes, are there any boundaries beyond which corporate executives should not transgress?

This question was posed in specific form the other day, when this writer was asked to arbitrate a difference of opinion among officers of a far flung financial organization.

A senior executive, in preparing a speech for an employes meeting, wanted to say without pulling any punches that he believed that the election next Novmbr or Wendell L. Willkie would be helpful to business and to the Nation.

Some of his associates counselled that it was not the role of the businessman to impinge in the realm of politics.

In defending his own position, the Willkie admirer cited a passage from a recent book by this writer in which the statement was made: "It is important for directors of corporations, trustees of fiduciary institutions, to do all in their power to clarify their operations, to tell the truth simply and understandably, and protect their constituents, their customers, and their employes from being exploited by those circulating demagogic half truths which are misleading, and which in their cumulative effect result in fantastic legislation, in economic misunderstanding, class warfare, if not in international warfare."

This writer has long advocated that corporate executives give the public a better understanding of modern economics through clarifying the financial reports of their own company. So doing would not only create miscellaneous good will and sympathetic understanding, but would also prevent the public from being hoodwinked by unscrupulous outsiders who sought to misrepresent business organizations.

But:

Corporate executives should not step out of their legitimate role, and become political stump speakers.

If they discuss issues in political economy, they should limit themselves to those which are relevant to the welfare of the company over which they preside.

Chief executives have no right to impinge on the freedom of their employes to vote as they choose.

When the former fail to make clear that they recognize their employes' liberty of action, as they did in the eleventh hour pay envelope message of 1936, they defeat their own purposes.

In their dealings with employes, stockholders and customers, executives should confine themselves to the use of objective facts and figures. They should leave to their audience the next step of translating the data into conclusions as to which candidate best exemplifies sound doctrines.

In his series of informal stockholder meetings around the country, James F. Bell, chairman of General Mills, Inc., has set a fine example. In so far as politics and new laws bear directly on the position of his corporations, he calls attention to them in a purely factual way. In effect, he says to stockholders: "Politics, as it bears on business and on your own welfare, is your baby, not mine. You didn't hire executives to play politics, but manage your enterprise. If action is necessary or desirable in the political field, you will know best what to do."

In relations with employes, Mr. Bell's attitude would also be constructive.

Executives should be untiring in collecting and disseminating, in simple form, economic data concerning the relations between government and business, but after presenting factual material, they should in their official activities as corporate executives, stop short of touting candidates or parties.

The Market

By C. Norman Stabler
A Special Correspondent.

Fresh Hitler Blast Drives Stocks Lower; Losses Generally Small in Light Deals

New York, July 19.—Discouragement pervaded share markets today and lower prices ruled in virtually all groups. The session derived no impulse in either direction from the Roosevelt acceptance speech in the wee sma' hours or the Hitler blast to the Reichstag at the start of the fourth hour. There were no surprises in either.

Mr. Roosevelt's nomination and acceptance had been a foregone conclusion in financial as well as political quarters; and his emphasis on the danger to the Nation from Nazi-Fascist victories was scarcely a new conception, nor is it doubted.

Hitler's demand that Britain cease resistance had been expected since the French collapse and was in fact anticipated by the British Premier, Winston Churchill, as a preliminary to the invasion of England, the attack on Gibraltar or both.

Wait-and-See Policy

So although a vast outpouring of money for national defense, and possibly to insure the return of the party in power, is assured in the immediate future, Wall Street could find no reason for abandoning the wait-and-see policy which has obtained virtually without a break since May.

While the brokers look to the election to be a market factor, they say that politics at this stage have little or no influence. The breakout either way will come on the next German move, and its result; the possibility of a Russian coup in the Balkans which would alter the present line-up of belligerents, or the ever possible long-shot of a peace. Continuation of the war, it is held, not only will determine the course of American business but may be the decisive factor in the forthcoming Presidential election.

As a matter of fact, the peace angle was operating again in a small way today and probably accounted for a general lift to foreign bonds, featuring British Empire issues, and a recovery of about 6 cents in sterling. On the other hand, war and hot weather were assayed as the reasons for a moderate bulge in wheat and corn markets, the former gaining ½ to 1 cent and the latter ½ to more than 2 cents. Cotton, moving wtihin a narrow range, was unchanged to 4 off.

Steel Issues Are Weak

Steels, motors and power stocks were in general weakest. Steel common closed at 50½, off 1½, although reports from output centers indicated maintenance of the current high rate of operations. Bethlehem dropped 1⅝ and Republic gave up a large fraction, all of them being fairly active considering the dull market.

Listed bonds were dull and easy today, save for a few speculative issues of domestic origin, and a group of foreign dollar securities. United States Treasury obligations dipped oy smallest fractions, and an easy tone prevailed also in most high grade corporate issues. Dealers apparently preferred to lighten commitments over the week-end, and institutional investment operations were modest. Trading in all bonds amounted only to $4,520,000.

German bonds were stimulated slightly by the speech made in Berlin by Chancellor Hitler, but Italians were uncertain. Canadian and Australian bonds advanced sharpoy, owing to the better level of free sterling. Belgian and Norwegian bonds remained firm, while Danish issues dipped. The Japanese group turned irregular. Latin-Americans were moderately improved on the eve of the Havana conference.

Speculative railroad bonds in the domestic list reflected a little profit taking, but the losses were small and a few issues managed to improve. Alleghany Corporation bonds again were marked upward, but utility holding issues were dull. Communications, amusement and other groups were neglected.

Listen! with Glynn

A couple of financial items about two of WJSV's successful alumni came trickling through in the mail today.

One's about Bob Trout, now C. B. S.'s chief special events announcer, whom you've been hearing all this week from the convention in Chicago. Bob, it seems, was pretty annoyed about not being able to use his boat—a modest little 51-foot thing—while he was away from New York. Poor Bob got a telephone call just as he was leaving. Would he consider chartering the boat for a week to a wealthy fishing enthusiast? he was asked. Mr. Trout's annoyance, for some reason, has changed to smiles. And it all goes to prove, if you ever doubted, that buying yachts is a paying investment.

The other's about Larry Elliott, who's now doing several network commercial shows. Larry was listening to George McCall's "Man About Hollywood" broadcast last Friday. An unidentified someone was singing, "A beautiful voice that gal's got," said Larry. "That's not a gal; that's a man," piped up someone else who was listening. "Bet you $50," said Larry. They called up McCall in Hollywood. Sad to report, the call was made on Larry's telephone. Sadder to report, it was a lyric tenor name of James O'Brien.

By Florence Osborne

Women are supposed to be more conservative than men, though there appear to be individual exceptions, particularly among the tournament players. Whether a pair would arrive at game on this hand, submitted for discussion by the Royal Bridge Studio, at 2228 Broadway, might depend upon whether a man or woman were sitting in the South seat. Here are the cards:

North
♠ Q 10 9 8 6 4
♡ K Q
◇ A Q 8
♣ K 5
South
♠ A 2
♡ 6 5 4
♣ Q J 10

The bidding, with neither side vulnerable and North dealer:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	2 ♡

'We would like your opinion as to the next call that North should make to best indicate his holdings and how the bidding should proceed from there."

We would bid two spades in the North seat, and whether we reached a game and whether we made the game if we bid it would depend upon fate and the personality of partner.

A conservative South player might pass two spades, and it could well be the best decision, for, with one sure loser in hearts and diamonds, it needs only a bungling of the spade suit to go down one at four spades, losing to the king and jack.

An optimistic South player might bid three spades, and then we would carry on to four with alacrity, hoping to play the spades correctly and win the game.

Five diamonds cannot be made, and we do not favor a raise of diamonds over the intervening two-heart call. If there is a game in diamonds, partner will come in aggressively over two spades, and a six-card major suit should be indicated if possible.

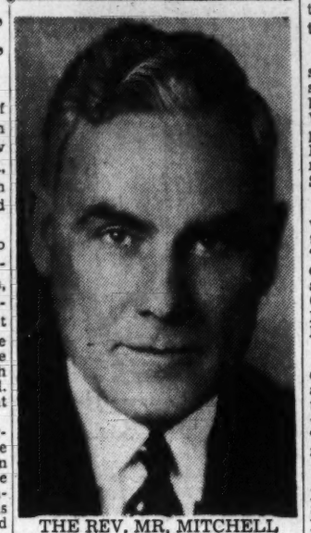
The Rev. Perry L. Mitchell, who resigned the pastorate of the nearby Clarendon First Baptist Church, one of Virginia's largest congregations, to launch the new project from scratch, will preach at the opening service at 11 a. m. in the Claude A. Swanson Junior High School, 5800 Washington boulevard. Another service will be held at 7:45 p. m. tomorrow.

The cleric, who personally borrowed $5,000 to buy a church site in the belief that a congregation could be formed, will present the matter of organizing a congregation at tomorrow's meeting which is expected to draw several hundred persons from the growing community.

He pointed out that services will continue in the school until the early spring, when ground will be broken for the first unit of the new project—a Sunday School structure. Work may begin before spring if enough funds are available, he said.



THE REV. MR. MITCHELL

The new congregation will be the only one within a two-mile radius, in a section where 94 homes have risen in the last two weeks.

Barricade Guards Barb-Wire Fence At Takoma Park

The front lawn of Ward P. Burdine, 9 Ash avenue, Takoma Park, Md., is well bulwarked against trespassers. Irked by the neighborhood children hanging on his fence and tearing it down every day or so, Burdine erected a barbed wire fence on the front of his lawn.

Town Police Commissioner H. H. Harrigan decided it was dangerous to passersby so he had a wooden barricade erected in front of the wire. Burdine, a veteran employe of the Internal Revenue Bureau and a master sergeant in the Service Company, First Infantry, Maryland National Guard, says it is "OK with me."

Burdine said that he and his family were away all day and it became a common occurrence to return home and find the front fence torn down. He obtained an estimate of erection of a more sturdy fence and decided to put up barbed wire to keep the children off. The wire is 8 inches behind the sidewalk.

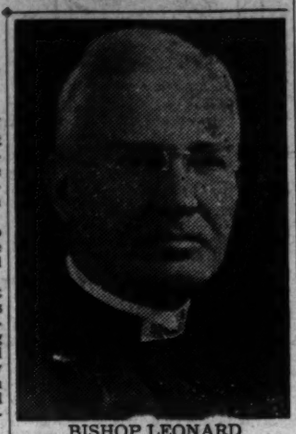
New Resident Methodist Prelate Will Make Tour

Bishop Leonard To Visit Maryland Conference Area



BISHOP LEONARD

Bishop Adna Wright Leonard, new resident prelate of the Methodist Church and successor to Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, will visit the Baltimore Conference districts, embracing 600 churches in Washington and Maryland, in September.

He will make personal visits to some individual churches and he will be greeted at some regional gatherings.

The bishop, who during the first week of September will take up his residence in the Methodist Church-owned dwelling at 2107 Wyoming avenue northwest, will be tendered a city-wide reception sponsored by the Methodist Union and Church Extension Socety, of which Samuel W. McIntosh is president, in October.

The former Bishop of the Pittsburgh area, appointed here by the jurisdictional conference on June 21, Bishop Leonard worked zealously to become one of America's foremost religious leaders.

He worked his way through Pennington (N. J.) Seminary by serving as secretary to the faculty, pinch-hitting for teachers and selling books and Chautauqua desks in the summer. He got through New York University by earning a four-year scholarship and by selling books, writing college notes for the New York Times and operating the sale and rental agency for academic gowns.

Receives Setback

Dr. George P. Eckman, a Morristown (N. J.) pastor, arranged to have him take over the assistant pastorate of St. Paul's Methodist Church, New York City, to which Dr. Eckman had been named pastor.

But a layman on the board at the last moment objected to employing a student as assistant pastor because he "could not possibly have experience enough to serve as assistant pastor in as great a church as St. Paul's."

His mother died during his senior year at New York University, and shortly after his graduation he went to Puerto Rico to aid organization of a Methodist church there. After forming 17 congregations an attack of a fever necessitated his return to the States.

He completed his work at Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., in 1901, and at the request of Bishop John H. Vincent, then in charge of Methodist work in Europe, and Dr. William Burt, Methodist district superintendent in Rome, Italy, he took the pastorate of the American church there and at the same time did postgraduate work for his Ph. D. in the American School of Archeology.

Returns to United States

Returning to America in 1903, he was appointed pastor of Grace Church, Piqua, Ohio, where he served for two years before being named to the Central Church, Springfield, Ohio. The latter was the church his father served when candidate for Governor of that State on the Prohibition Party ticket in 1884.

He subsequentyl occupied the pulpits of the Walnut Hills Methodist Church, Cincinnati, and the First Church, Seattle, Wash., and in 1916 was elected to the Methodist episcopacy at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., just 30 days after his father's death. His first appointment was to the San Francisco area, and then to Buffalo.

Bishop Leonard has written several books, among them "The Shepherd King," "Evangelism in the Remaking of the World," "Ancient Fires on Modern Altars," describing the founding and organization of the Preaching Mission movement, and others. He served as president of the board of education of the old Methodist Episcopal Church and since unification has been chairman of the joint committee on Christian education.

He and Mrs. Leonard, who in 1929 visited 27 foreign mission stations, have two children—Phyllis, wife of the Rev. Henry G. Budd, jr., of the Genesee (N. Y.) Conference, and Adna, jr., a successful Pittsburgh businessman—and several grandchildren.

Pittsburgh's religious and civic leaders last Tuesday night tendered a farewell reception to Bishop and Mrs. Leonard at Christ Church.

"DIES IRAE"
. . . THOMAS OF CELANO . . .

Day of wrath! O Day of mourning!
Lo, the world in ashes burning—
Seer and Sibyl gave the warning.
O what fear man's bosom rendeth,
When from heaven the Judge descendeth,
On whose sentence all dependeth!
Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
Latin ecclesiastical poetry reached the height of its magnificence in this hymn, written about the year 1255. The modest author never considered it a hymn or a poem—merely a simple meditation, though the solemn strength of its vibrations has been felt for centuries.
